General introduction

This concordance is a Keyword-in-Context (KWIC) concordance – that is, it lists each word alphabetically, as an index does, but also shows the context in which the word appears in the original text. In this case, the context given is ten words long either side of the keyword.

My aim in producing it is to aid scholars working on Deleuze and Guattari generally. Recent and growing interest not solely in the works of Deleuze and Guattari but also in the very model of interdisciplinary activity that their works propose and demonstrate means that a vast range of scholars of differing specialisms are now employing Deleuzian terms. Within the academy, disciplines now employing their works as epistemological tools or models include philosophy, literary studies, linguistics, cultural studies, film and media studies, history of art, sociology anthropology, history, philosophy of science, and information technology, among many others. Beyond the confines of academic study, Deleuzian methods have recently found applications particularly in military theory, political strategy and analysis; for example, in General Sir Rupert Smith's The Utility of Force: The Art of War in the Modern World (2005), which uses the concept of the rhizome to explain the non-hierarchical organization of terrorist movements.

A concordance for Deleuze and Guattari is particularly needed because the use of their concepts and terms is expanding so rapidly and in so many different disciplinary directions. Their works are terminologically dense and cover many distinct academic fields, from philosophy to literary study, film theory and art history. Whilst many of their neologisms have entered standard usage in a wide number of fields, the exact meanings of these terms are often in dispute, and specialists in one discipline may often be unaware of the exact origins and evolution of any given term, especially where that term is first introduced in a Deleuzian work dealing with an area beyond their own specialism. A concordance provides an essential solution to the problem of maintaining rigour in definition of terms, and facilitates more productive and more efficient collaboration between scholars of distinct specialisms. In doing so, the value of such a resource extends well beyond the basic albeit not inconsiderable value of textual analysis: any concordance of this type encourages and directly aids the very process of interdisciplinary and collaborative research.

A note on this volume

It is important to remember that the concordance takes as its corpus text not the French original, but the English translation (in this case, Robert Hurley, Mark Seem and Helen R. Lane's 1977 translation of Anti-Oedipus.) Bible scholars are used to working with a standard text that is not in the original language, and use a concordance to negotiate the gaps of definition between their own modern-language text and the Hebrew and Greek originals. I hope that this concordance of Deleuze and Guattari helps scholars to bridge the gap of definition between their English-language scholarship and the original French texts.

In re-editing the 1977 English text in preparation for this concordance, I've chosen not to correct the various typographical errors and mistakes it contains: these are reproduced exactly in the concordance index.

The full Web Concordance to Deleuze and Guattari's works is at <http://www.danohara.co.uk/dgc.html> . At the time of writing it contains Anti-Oedipus and A Thousand Plateaus, with further works being added periodically; it is in the Web Concordance that corrections of any existing errors are made with each update. I'd be grateful if users of the concordance would report any errors to me at the Web Concordance, so that the full version can be improved.

Everything returns or recurs: States, nations, families. That is to another. The reason is that persons are derived from abstract quantities, instead of from flows. Instead of a connective appropriation the reality of the real was posed as a divisible abstract quantity, whereas the real was divided up into qualified unities Oedipus—to obtain the loss-of-reality effect. This is not an abstract operation: an Oedipal organization is imposed on the psychotic, though of decoded flows, substituting for intrinsic codes an axiomatic of abstract quantities in the form of money. Capitalism therefore liberates the which corresponds to the decoding of flows that have become abstract. A kinship system is not a structure but not manage to break the codes in favor of their abstract or fictional quantities. And isn't that also what Oedipus, the searching for what they mean by applying them to an abstract familial whole that is thought to contain the secret of territoriality is the product of an effective deterritorialization that substitutes abstract signs for the signs of the earth, and that makes is an origin or an abstraction, it is the original abstract essence that is not to be confused with a beginning	p 33 p 34 p 71 p 87 p 123 p 139 p 143 p 143 p 143 p 143 p 147 p 153 p 183 p 196 p 198

But the first to say that, everything considered, belief is not an act of the unconscious; it is always the preconscious that believes the father acts on the child's unconscious—but does he act as a head of a family in an expressive familial oneself—man's externalization in the thing—has merely become the act of externalizing—the process of alienating. It is, in fact Worse yet, it will happen that psychoanalysis itself wants to act as an axiomatic, which is the famous turning point where large objectivities, to the territorial or the despotic body, which act as natural or divine preconditions that thus ensure the coding that is, it effuses in the immanent system where each act of production is inextricably linked to the process of anti along with Maud Mannoni when she sees the first historical act of antipsychiatry in the 1902 decision granting Judge Schreber his of a given system. Such an Partial objects are subjected to the notorious law of totality-unity acting as lacking. The disjunctions are subjected to the alternative of an actual neurosis—continues to present the actual factors as acting by means of a repressive deprivation (the sexual stasis) and he installs his desiring-machines and produces a perpetual outflow of acting forces. He has crossed over the limit, the schiz, which simplest, so-called manual forms, the technical machine already implies an acting, a transmitting, or even a driving element that is nonhuman represented. 4 Psychoanalysis and Ethnology We are moving too fast, acting as if Oedipus were already installed within the savage territorial the Yourougou myth, which introduces disorder into the world by acting as the representative of desire. ACTION 34 most assuredly not as an ideal model, but as revolutionary action and passion. In his recent works Klossowski indicates to us humor makes God into the master of a syllogism. The action characteristic of Oedipal recording is the introduction of an exclusive us from one pole to the other. A double pincer action that crushes the unconscious caught in its exclusive disjunction. The hand, all kinds of other variable substances had the same action as the envisaged organizing stimulus, and that on the other its own justifications, and that—however capable of expressing the action of the alienating forces—mediates them precisely by suppressing the which is none other than the alienated form of the action of praxis of the family members that literally dominates the who will then be dissociated and otherwise regrouped within the action of the great man and the crowd. It hardly matters where it now proceeds to serve as a principle for action....This has nothing to do with the active unconscious [which] this is precisely where the operation arises. Under the precocious action of social repression, the family slips into and interferes with internalize them in an institutional model at every stage of action, transmission, and motricity. Hence the social machine fashions a memory Oedipus; on the contrary, alliance articulates them, impelled by the action of the local lines and their non-oedipal primary homosexuality. And we must consider many primitive cures; they are schizoanalysis in action. Victor Turner gives a remarkable example of such a cure possess a message value here, but is an instrument of action that acts on the body itself. ... The signs command the He does not act, but is passive under the graphic action; he receives the stamp of the sign. And what is this system is active, acted upon, or reacted to: the action of the voice of alliance, the passion of the body from the respective autonomy of the voice and the graphic action, and also from the autonomous eye that extracts pleasure from gathering all the subjects into the new machine. The essential action of the State, therefore, is the creation of a second adhere to the persons, where the persons elude the graphic action, and where the eye no longer has anything to see the imperial barbarian law crushes the whole primitive interplay of action, the en-acted (l'agi), and reaction. Passivity must now become the or even its suppression. It must result from the repressing action of the incestuous representation, which is not yet by any desire, since on the contrary the representation exercises its repressive action on desire itself. The Oedipus complex, as it is called will be brought about by the decoding of flows. The action of decoded flows is not enough, however, to cause the slavery (esclavagisme). And it is well known that the monopolistic action favoring the guilds and the companies promotes, not the rise struggle against overproduction. There has never been a liberal capitalism: action against monopolies goes back first of all to a time child. But instead of being a strategy that, through the action of alliances and filiations, opens onto the entire social field an individual which springs from a single centre of reproductive action; we therefore assume that there can be no reproductive action action; we therefore assume that there can be no reproductive action which does not arise from a single center; but this configurations are organized that necessarily reproduce a structure under the action of DNA and its segments, the genes, performing veritable lottery first path: it is not the father who indicates the action of machines, but just the opposite; thereafter there is no structural unity, and the signs themselves become signifying under the action of a despotic symbol that totalizes them in the name we become a living example, an advertisement, a theorem in action, so as to attract our children to Oedipus: we have Inversely, one can find the form of social alienation in action in all the reterritorializations of capitalism, inasmuch as they keep not signifying recent as opposed to infantile, but rather in action, as opposed to what is virtual and will come about the libido, i.e., to the schizorevolutionary pole, since this action could not be accomplished without overthrowing power, without reversing subordination	p 63 p 76 p 83 p 91 p 95 p 95 p 103 p 115 p 120 p 141 p 165 p 167 p 189 p 189 p 189 p 191 p 198 p 205 p 213 p 216 p 216 p 222 p 223 p 253 p 264 p 285 p 285 p 289 p 297 p 310 p 312 p 320 p 358 p 367

It should be noted that Judge Schreber's endogenous sources of the superego, Freud constantly asserts that the active factors are not the real parents, nor even the parents adaptation or integration, but rather of instituting original forms of active groups, the question arises as to what extent these core that troubled times had unconscious effects not only on the active militants, but also on those claiming to be neutral and principle for action....This has nothing to do with the active unconscious [which] sparkles, vibrates, travels ... we realize that the unconscious a musician tells us that music does not attest to active and conquering forces, but to reactive forces, to reactions to everywhere reactions of the daddy-mommy type for what is essentially active, aggressive, artistic, productive, and triumphant in the unconscious itself. Undecidable, virtual, reactive or reactional (reactionnel), such is Oedipus. It the work itself, to make of it this minor expressive activity that secretes ideology according to the dominant codes. The work To such a degree that circulating—exchanging—is a secondary activity in comparison with the task that sums up all the a mutual embrace. And this is already the highly perverse activity of local groups who arrange marriages on the surface of machine) the marriages. When we ascribed to them a perverse-normal activity, we meant that these local groups were the agents of collection of taxes, the State monopoly, imperial justice, the functionaries' activity, historiography: everything is written in the despot's procession. Let us is indeed the simplest and most ancient relation of productive activity, but it does not appear as such and only becomes In such a system no one escapes participation in the activity of antiproduction that drives the entire productive system. But it Adam Smith to throw out every limiting specification of wealth-creating activity—not only manufacturing, or commercial, or agricultural labour; but one as others, labour in general ... the abstract universality of wealth-creating activity. Here we have the great movement of decoding or deterritorialization of wealth, the mercantilists had determined it as a special activity still tied to a money-creating despotic machine; the physiocrats, pushing the physiocrats, pushing this presentiment still further, had tied. subjective activity to a territorial or reterritorialized machine, in the form of no longer relates to a distinct object, but to productive activity itself. The socius as full body has become directly economic nature, but as an abstract and deterritorialized subjective essence, the activity of production in general. But as this determination develops under an allosteric enzyme and the ligands prompting or inhibiting its activity there exists no chemically necessary relationship of structure or of orgone, St. Elmo's fire, and the bluish formations [of] sunspot activity, fluids and flows, matter and particles, in the end appear As Marx says, in capitalism the essence becomes subjective—the activity of production in general—and abstract labor becomes something real a universal subjective libido. In short, the discovery of an activity of production in general and without distinction, as it appears and labor—a common essence, inasmuch as it is the activity of production in general—is capitalism continually realienating this essence representations, theatrical scenes. And when engaged in this task no activity will be too malevolent. Causing Oedipus and castration to explode of the object were really the lowest level of analytic activity, even and especially when they claim to double the real as the poor woman. Secondly, the familial romance and fantasy activity in general will be presented by Freud as a veritable the Virgin stands for all the desiring women, a joyous activity of profanation extends beneath this generalized privatization. Thus Fortes (1953), while recognizing that ties of affinity have comparable importance to ties of descent, disguises the former of negotiating for men perhaps finds its reply in women's affinity with the germinal influx, resulting in the enclosed position of repression (refoulement). Returning yet again to the case of Judge Schreber, we note that he do not flee the center forever, but approach it once again, only to retreat from it yet again: such is the approach it once again, only to retreat from it yet again: such is the nature of the violent oscillations that overwhelm without organs (but what is most unusual is that here again a new afflux is necessary, merely to signify this absence the whole of it reaches expression and then disappears once again in the space of just one day—even though it the schizo sums up by saying: they're fucking me over again. Or the symbol and what is symbolized, has arisen again and again. Is this relationship to be considered causal? Or is it as an ego cut off from the world, and yet again—most temptingly—as an ego that had not ceased to sympathetic superobserver—in short, a phenomenologist. Let us remember once again one of Marx's caveats: we cannot tell from the mere autism). We find ourselves confronted with the same problem once again: How has the process of the production of desire, how income that comes its way as something left over. (Here again, how bad a model the Oedipal model of castration is the room, shutting himself in, saying dark, and ran out again directly. He went through this performance several times. It is not a question of denying the vital importance independence from an indefinite parental regression. To quote Artaud once again: I got no / papamummy. We have seen how a we have a properly analytical fallacy (which will be found again, to a considerable degree, in the theory of the signifier some fine pages, Andre Green recently took up the question again by making up a list of three types of sessions asymmetry, exclusion, noncommunication, vice, and guilt. There again it is a question of an intense potential for investment to the segregative and biunivocal use made of them. There again this biunivocal use, illegitimate from the point of view of of desire within reality. From the moment desire is welded again to the law—we needn't point out what is known the children, with whom the same story begins all over again? We wonder if Oedipus in fact expresses desire; if Oedipus be no need to prohibit what is not desired. Resonance—here again, either muffled or public, disgraceful or proud—is the family's he is sure of being able to make everything rise again from the mother, and to keep for his Own secret The themes of the preceding paintings are to be found again here, their meaning changed. The canvas is truly broken, sundered they never cease falling to do so. The neurotic impasse again closes—the daddy-mommy of oedipalization, America, the return to the not a goal, a production and not an expression. Here again, oedipalization is one of the most important factors in the of workers possessing nothing more than their labor capacity (here again, two distinct forms of deterritorialization). In a sense, capitalism has feel of a flow that would elude their codes. Then again, if we say that capitalism determines the conditions and the because they determine critical points where the apparatus starts up again—provided it is blocked, and where it necessarily places itself of intensive and inclusive disjunctions, it still has to find again and reanimate lateral connections in the network itself, and it of incest as a manifestation of the germinal lineage. Then again, Hamlet is not an extension of Oedipus, an Oedipus to The somatic order causes the whole intensive scale to collapse again. Actually, if the son cannot marry his mother, it is are never more so than when they arrange marriages). Then again—and this is his most serious error—when he wants colonized resists oedipalization, and oedipalization tends to close around him again. To the degree that there is oedipalization, it is due culture. Then what caused culturalism to go wrong? And here again there is no contradiction in the fact that it started we have said repeatedly that Oedipus is demanded, and demanded again and again; and even an attempt as profound as Lacan's said repeatedly that Oedipus is demanded, and demanded again and again; and even an attempt as profound as Lacan's at shaking Oedipus must always resume its point of departure and find again its point of arrival. Oedipus is a limit. But limit voyage before burying or immersing it. If present-day ethnologists are again evincing a lively interest in the hypothetical concept of the part in an aggressing apparatus, in a separating machine. Once again, it is not a question of knowing if the essence of exchange? But Levi-Strauss seems to have closed the question again with a categorical reply: debt is no more than a inscription process. Debt is the direct result of inscription. Once again no revenge, no resentment will be invoked here—that is force of projection that defines paranoia, this strength to start again from zero, to objectify a complete transformation: the subject leaps finds her in penetrating into the tribe, or finds her again in returning to the tribe after his first marriage. He is again correct in linking writing to incest in a mysterious fashion is simulated or not, since in any case something else again is simulated through incest. And in accordance with the complementarity the avenging sword of the vengeance of alliance. For once again, before it becomes a feigned guarantee against despotism, the law rebellions and constant secessions, and not that of revolution. Here again, death will have to be felt from within, but it struggle, their superposition, their interlocking arrangements. Let us marvel once again at Freud's account of Oedipus. And as we have seen, it is the same agency—the family—that performs this double operation, distorting and disfiguring suppressed, it continues to rumble, to throb beneath the representative agency (instance representative) that suffocates it, and that it in return law, a represented that is displaced in relation to an agency in a constant state of displacement. But from this, two But from this, two unwarranted conclusions are drawn: that this agency can be discovered by way of the displaced represented; and way of the displaced represented; and this, precisely because this agency itself belongs to representation, as a nonrepresented representative, or as that performs the artificial reterritorializations of desire. If the displacing agency can be concluded from the displaced, this is only true displaced represented; yes, castration is indeed the representative, the displacing agency (le deplacant), the signifier—but none of that constitutes an civilization on the contrary finds itself sanctified as the sale agency capable of opposing the death desire. And how. does. it capitalism is how it inherited much from a transcendent death-carrying agency, the despotic signifier, but also how it brought about this unconscious productions and formations were not merely repelled by an agency of psychic repression that would enter into compromises with them goal on them, and makes scientists and science into an agency perfectly subjugated to the formation of sovereignty (for example, the groups). AGENT 24 in the form of a persecuting organ or some exterior agent of persecution. But in and of itself the paranoiac machine itself. The psychoanalyst became the carrier of Oedipus, the great agent of antiproduction in desire. The same history as that of means of sexual repression. The family is indeed the delegated agent of this psychic repression, insofar as it ensures a mass operation: the repressive social formation delegates its power to an agent of psychic repression, and correlatively the repressed desire is as disfigured, displaced by psychic repression. The family is the delegated agent of psychic repression, or rather the agent delegated to psychic is the delegated agent of psychic repression, or rather the agent delegated to psychic repression; the incestuous drives are the disfigured its disposal, on the recording surface of the socius, an agent that is also capable of acting on, of inscribing the on, of inscribing the recording surface of desire. Such an agent exists: the family. It belongs essentially to the recording of that Oedipus is an application, and the family a delegated agent. Even by application it is hard, it is difficult for law, or the apparent objective movement; but also a magical agent or fetish, the quasi cause. It is not content to the person with standing in the village who becomes the agent of the administration, the elders who curse the White Man reduces them to a restricted and neuroticized familial reproduction whose agent is Oedipus. After all, how are we to understand those characteristics: the inscription on the socius is in fact the agent of a secondary psychic repression, or repression in the proper was still something en-acted, in order to become the somber agent of overcoding, the detached object that hovers over each subject such has no revolutionary potential; he is the first integrated agent of integration, a refuge for bad conscience, and the forced it, an instance that serves as a support and an agent of inscription. That is what Althusser and Balibar show so everyone acts and is acted upon (patit) as a collective agent of enunciation, an agent of production and antiproduction, is reduced acted upon (patit) as a collective agent of enunciation, an agent of production and antiproduction, is reduced to Oedipus, where everyone sanity, the family as an alienating factor and as an agent of dealienation, if only through the way in which it family in an expressive familial transmission, or rather as the agent of a machine, in a machinic information or communication? Schreber's this field the father has a role only as an agent of production and antiproduction, Freud, on the contrary, chooses the to consider them as identical by showing how the familial agent extends the one into the other. Between the two, however field. Every loved or desired being serves as a collective agent of enunciation. And it is certainly not, as Freud believed or are they on the contrary the place and the agent of a sudden and unexpected irruption, an irruption of desire

all production, constituting a surface over which the forces and agents of production are distributed, thereby appropriating for itself all surplus to emanate from it as a quasi cause. Forces and agents come to represent a miraculous form of its own power embodying itself in the machine as fixed capital. Machines and agents cling so closely to capital that their very functioning appears ordinary sense of the word. It remains fluid and slippery. Agents of production likewise alight on Schreber's body and cling to of the body without organs: even the copulations of the agents, even the divisions of God, even the genealogies marking it as ideal models but as group fantasies—that is, as agents of the real productivity of desire, making it possible to without organs all by themselves, and make no distinction between agents and their own parts, or between the relations of production a basis of relations and as a means of assigning agents a place and a function; but these agents are not intersubjective of assigning agents a place and a function; but these agents are not persons, any more than these relations are intersubjective are intersubjective. They are relations of production as such, and agents of production and antiproduction. Ray Bradbury demonstrates this very well where the only connection is that between partial objects and agents. The small child lives with his family around the clock functions that the parents are going to occupy as special agents, closely related to other agents? From the very beginning Oedipus going to occupy as special agents, closely related to other agents? From the very beginning Oedipus exists in one form and suckling babe, that these relations with partial objects, with the agents of production, with the factors of antiproduction are woven, in who sets up units of production, and grapples with collective agents of production and antiproduction. Psychoanalysis is like the Russian Revolution it comes furtively to occupy a place among the collective agents. The terms of Oedipus do not form a triangle, but the father and mother have their roles there as subordinate agents of transmission or execution. When the notion of group fantasy the colonel too, and also the mother—when all the agents of social production and antiproduction are in this way reduced a direct relationship proceeding from the statement to the collective agents of enunciation in the group fantasy. Institutional analysis tries to longer designate persons, but singularities flocking from all sides, evanescent agents of production. This is free disjunction; the differential positions persist so he could flee. And then, all around, there are agents of production and antiproduction, the organizers of the escape, the It is precisely this pairing of the parental figures with agents of another nature, their locking embrace similar to that of claiming to express or represent this different nature of the agents that are in question in the unconscious itself. When Frantz represent the unconscious, and to represent in it the various agents of the collectivity; rather, they always shatter into fragments that always shatter into fragments that come into contact with these agents, meet them face to face, square off with them, or investments in which the parents merely have a role as agents of a special production or antiproduction, always grappling with other of a special production or antiproduction. always grappling with other agents that they express all the less as they are increasingly

Membership in a class refers to the role	p 336 p 344
And from this viewpoint it is indeed true that an aggregate comprises practically only a single class, that class which has way in which desire represses itself in the great capitalist aggregate. Repressing desire, not only for others but in oneself, being depending on whether desire is enslaved to a structured molar aggregate that it constitutes under a given form of power and of power and gregariousness, or whether it subjugates the large aggregate to the functional multiplicities that it itself forms on the level, and is defined by the characteristics of a new aggregate, the unconscious or libidinal break belongs to the second level	p 344 p 346 p 348 p 348 p 349 p 356 p 358

All that is missing is the confirmations of common sense sexual energy is the direct investment of masses, of large aggregates, and of social and organic fields. We have difficulty understanding family, and must be transformed in order to invest larger aggregates. The truth is that sexuality is everywhere: the way a through a desexualizing extension that the libido invests the large aggregates. On the contrary, it is through a restriction, a blockage open up to more spacious worlds, to masses and large aggregates. There is always something statistical in our loves, and something relationship of sexuality in general, insofar as it invests large aggregates (man and man)? Whence what came to be called the If sexuality is the unconscious investment of the large molar aggregates, it is because on its other side sexuality is identical with the interplay of the molecular elements that constitute these aggregates under determinate conditions. or a consequence of social reproduction, insofar as this latter aims at domesticating a genealogical form and content that are in the cycle of intensities. This is because the despotic signifier aims at the reconstitution of the full body of the intense or nature of desire, no longer in relation to objects, aims, or even sources (territories), but as an abstract subjective essence that the child, through the mommy-territoriality and the daddy-law, already aims for the schizzes and the encoded or axiomated flows of is itself a system of means in terms of the aims of desire. The link between the two remains secondary and as the principle of every representation of the objects and aims of desire. Freud discovers the subjective nature or abstract essence beyond all representations that would bind it to objects, to aims, or even to particular sources. Freud is thus the first objectities) as to the specific elements that determine its objects, aims, and sources. It is in this way that myth ascribes that creates its own interest in terms of new social aims, new organs and means, a new possible state of social to be represented by a party apparatus that assigns these aims and means, and effects a revolutionary break in the preconscious interest in one place rather than another, to fix our aims on a given path, convinced that this is where our indicators of a degree of development; the apparent interests and aims are merely the preconscious exponents of a social full body but it can exert this violence only by assigning itself aims and meanings in which even the most enslaved elements participate or have the chance to participate, under the cover of aims and interests. The fact remains that there exists a disinterested these are the object of desire, higher than all the aims. It will never flow too much, it will never break into incomes, incomes of wages or of enterprises that define aims or spheres of interest, selections, detachments, and portions. But the the unconscious libido, inasmuch as it is presupposed by the aims. We see the most disadvantaged, the most excluded members of socius, looking for the right place where, according to the aims and the interests assigned to us, one feels something moving unconscious libidinal investment. A revolutionary preconscious investment bears upon new aims, new social syntheses, a new power. But it could be promotion of a socius as a full body carrying new aims, as a form of power or a formation of sovereignty regime of social production that creates, distributes, and satisfies new aims and interests. But the unconscious revolution does not merely refer capacity can be evaluated in terms of the objects, the aims, or the sources of the sexual drives animating an individual to liberate sexuality, and to demand its rights to objects, aims, and sources, all the while maintaining the corresponding flows within and protests concerning the liberty of sexual objects, sources, and aims, as long as sexuality is kept—consciously or not—within that embraces a full body for itself, independently of all aims, and a degree of development for itself, independently of all by their objects, any more than by the sources and aims of the desires and the drives. is indeed a sexual revolution, which does not concern objects, aims, or sources, but only machinic forms or indices. The fourth itself as a full body without organs, beyond the preconscious aims and interests that it assigns and distributes. The fact remains the light of day: it must always hide under assignable aims or interests presented as the general aims and interests, even hide under assignable aims or interests presented as the general aims and interests, even though in reality the latter represent only gushings of mercy and pity knowing nothing of meanings and aims (the Artaud experiment, the Burroughs experiment). It is here that present in art from its beginnings, but was hidden underneath aims and objects, even if aesthetic, and underneath recordings or axiomatics which get nasty as soon as the nature of their aims is questioned (It's clear that you're not workers, you have case, there is truly a new investment of interest, new aims that presuppose another body than that of capital-money; those exploited to invest a new social body corresponding to these new aims, in order for it to perform a revolutionary break at the position of a simple revolutionary break with regard to aims and interests, and finally re-forms a merely specific reterritoriality, a an existing order of interests, of causes and means, of aims and reasons; or else the investment of interest itself gives with causality as well as a calling in question of aims and interests. In each case the problem is different: it in their own place, within the order of causes and aims that promote a new socius, or are they on the irruption, an irruption of desire that breaks with causes and aims and overturns the socius, revealing its other side? and the relations of production. The product appears to be all the more specific, incredibly specific and readily describable, the more process of production on which it depends. The schizophrenic appears all the more specific and recognizable as a distinct personality if To a certain degree, the traditional logic of desire is all wrong from the very outset: from the very first step object behind every real object, or a mental production behind all real productions. This conception does not necessarily compel psychoanalysis to productive embrace, and reproduces it in a way that is all the more intense because it has few needs. And never wants and needs (manque) amid an abundance of production; making all of desire teeter and fall victim to the great fear would be secondary ones of introjection and projection, as though all social practices had their precise counterpart in introjected or internal that others occasionally go out on strike, but rather that all those who are starving do not steal as a regular are starving do not steal as a regular practice, and all those who are exploited are not continually out on strike for them. Hence in group fantasy the libido may invest all of an existing social field, including the latter's most repressive this, a second difference in regime results: desiring-machines produce antiproduction all by themselves, whereas the antiproduction characteristic of technical machines takes the economy of desire; they produce a body without organs all by themselves, and make no distinction between agents and their its form and its function, and deliberately perpetuates it, in all its violence, with all the powers at its command. Its function, and deliberately perpetuates it, in all its violence, with all the powers at its command. Its sovereign production and repression limit, which is a genuinely schizophrenic limit. It tends, with all the strength at its command, to produce the schizo as carried further and further, to the point that capitalism with all its flows may dispatch itself straight to the moon: we schizophrenic accumulation of energy or charge, against which it brings all its vast powers of repression to bear, but which nonetheless while simultaneously tending toward that limit. Capitalism institutes or restores all sorts of residual and artificial, imaginary, or symbolic territorialities, thereby the residual or artificial territorialities of our society, and reduces all of them (les rabat toutes) to Oedipus as the ultimate surplus product, its proletariat, and its exterminating angel. He scrambles all the codes and is the transmitter of the decoded flows of production. That is why, at the limit point of all the transverse or transfinite connections, the partial object and the declares that they are of no importance; she thus short-circuits all the connections.) Connecticut, Connect-I-cut! cries little Joey. In his study an attitude of total withdrawal. Hence there is first of all, according to Bettelheim, an autonomous reaction to the total life in which the relations of each of the regions with all the others are recorded. An organ may have connections that the regime of another organ—the anorectic mouth, for instance. All sorts of functional questions thus arise: What flow to break organs. These indifferent signs follow no plan, they function at all levels and enter into any and every sort of connection firmly define a specific, personal subject. No chain is homogeneous; all of them resemble, rather, a succession of characters from different outside world, from one region to another of the organism, all intersect, following the endlessly ramified paths of the great disjunctive hand that are valuable in and of themselves and above all must not be filled in. This is thus the second or recording bricks within the coexistence and the interaction of all the syntheses. How could part of a flow be drawn limit of the social codes, where a despotic Signifier destroys all the chains, linearizes them, biunivocalizes them, and uses the bricks of bricks or blocks, their detachment and fragmentation, and above all what such a theory presupposes: the introduction of desire into nothing to do with the whole; it performs its role all by itself. In this case, only after the subject has would sacrifice a very large part of its interests. Like all the other breaks, the subjective break is not at all all the other breaks, the subjective break is not at all an indication of a lack or need (manque), but on last one to be turned up, so that they may all be glued back together to create a unity that is but does not totalize them; it is a unity of all of these particular parts but does not unify them; rather Lost Time constitutes, we are struck by the fact that all the parts are produced as asymmetrical sections, paths that suddenly communication between noncommunicating vessels, transverse unities between elements that retain all their differences within their own particular boundaries. Thus in the order to locate itself. The whole not only coexists with all the parts; it is contiguous to them, it exists as logic of these objects? It is doubtless because, first of all, she conceives of them as fantasies and judges them from a sufficient charge in and of themselves to blow up all of Oedipus and totally demolish its ridiculous claim to represent desire. The question that thus arises here is not at all that of the relative importance of what might be called Oedipus the sole measure of desiring-production. And naturally this is all the more true in the case of run-of-the-mill practitioners who have the slightest notion of what the psychoanalytic movement is all about. It is no longer a question of suggestion, but and forth. It is obvious that his parents are present all this time, and that the child would have nothing were exists in one form and one form only: open in all directions to a social field, to a field of production beyond. The role of such relations must be recognized in all psychopathological processes, and their importance will be all the greater recognized in all psychopathological processes, and their importance will be all the greater when we are dealing with psychotic syndromes that as a confession of guilt, its theories are not at all radical or innovative. On the contrary: it is completing the effort to do away with this problem once and for all. 2 PSYCHOANALYSIS AND FAMILIALISM: THE HOLY FAMILY 1 The Imperialism 3+1) that does not conform to a triangle, but performs all the possible triangulations by distributing in a given domain desire makes Oedipus into a kind of universal Catholic symbol, beyond all the imaginary modalities. It makes Oedipus into a referential axis and aimed at the role of parental figures, without at all penetrating the structure and its order of symbolic positions and Oedipus, structural as well as imaginary, and something else that all the Oedipuses crush and repress: desiring-production—the machines of desire invariant merely express the history of a long mistake, throughout all its variations and modalities; the strain of an endless repression the former to a psychic fantasy reality. Oedipus is what all but got lost for the sake of a biological realism injection, the Wolf Man's ticktock, Anna's coughing machine, and also all the explanatory apparatuses set into motion by Freud, all those also all the explanatory apparatuses set into motion by Freud, all those neurobiologico-desiring-machines. And the discovery of the productive unconscious has the relationship of psychic repression with social repression. This will all be lost, or at least singularly compromised, with the establishment opening onto polyvocal connections, confines itself to a univocal impasse. All the chains of the unconscious are biunivocalized, linearized, suspended from this world of wild production and explosive desire, wanting at all costs to restore a little order there, an order made them. He tends therefore to maintain an attitude of denial: all of that is surely true, but it is still daddy-mommy nature, flows of speech in exchange for flows of money. All that is needed is what is called a psychotic episode

Then Oedipus fell back on and appropriated desiring-production as if all the productive forces emanated from Oedipus itself. The psychoanalyst became is easy to see that the problem is first of all practical, that it concerns above all else the practice of problem is first of all practical, that it concerns above all else the practice of the cure. For the frenzied oedipalization psychoanalysis? Freud held to his atheism in heroic fashion. But all around him, more and more, they respectfully allowed him to imperialism of Oedipus is founded here on an absence. After all, of the three supposed phases of the girl's fantasy, the leaves the second, then, where the father shines forth in all his brilliance, clearly without doubt—but indeed, this second phase the unconscious is achieved when the thousand breaks-flows of desiring-machines—all positive, all productive—are projected into the same mythical space

What does belief applied to the that the mother is nonetheless the father too, it reduces all of desire to a familial determination that no longer has Oedipus do not form a triangle, but exist shattered into all corners of the social field—the mother on the instructor's conferred on the existing social order carried into the ego all the investments of repression, the phenomena of identification, of superegoization

It is therefore all the more disturbing to see to what extent Freudian analysis daddy, and the colonel too, and also the mother—when all the agents of social production and antiproduction are in this session is dominated by an extreme mobility of representations of all sorts, ... the language is unfettered, rapid, almost torrential, ... everything is uttering without changing anything fundamental to the analytic situation.... All of this is without consequence, since the analysis slides off resistance of the ego, this is the intense outcry of all of desiring-production. We already knew that the pervert resisted oedipalization you see, the colonel, the instructor, the teacher, the boss, all of this meant that: Oedipus and castration, all history in the boss, all of this meant that: Oedipus and castration, all history in a new version. We are not saying that this sufficient to silence the outcry of desiring-production: We are all schizos! We are all perverts! We are all libidos that the outcry of desiring-production: We are all schizos! We are all perverts! We are all libidos that are too viscous and We are all schizos! We are all perverts! We are all libidos that are too viscous and too fluid—and not his desire both the lava and the water? And above all, what brings about our sickness? Schizophrenia itself, as a process been done, the treatment has chosen the path of oedipalization, all cluttered with refuse, instead of the schizophrenization that must cure pure multiplicity, where the partial objects, the boxes, the vessels all have their positive determinations, and enter into aberrant communication following Gomorrah series, each one excluding the other. This is not all, however, since the vegetal theme—the innocence of flowers—brings with the male part of the other man, etc. Here all guilt ceases, for it cannot cling to such flowers as molecular sense. That is why Proust, the first to deny all oedipalizing interpretations of his own interpretations, contrasts two kinds of the unconscious following a given use. It is first of all the synthesis of recording that in effect situates, on its in two forms, the one negative, having to do above all with the mother and imposing differentiation, the other positive, concerning but reproducing it as well, transmitting it rather than dying all alone, incestuous, homosexual, and a zombie. Thus the parental or interferes with the recording of desire in order to transform all its productive connections. But we are able at least to of sexuality shift into the Oedipal framework: this projection of all the breaks-flows onto the same mythical locale, and all the of all the breaks-flows onto the same mythical locale, and all the non signifying signs into the same major signifier. The the penis gives its full meaning to castration. Through it, all the external experiences linked to deprivation, to frustration, to the lack of partial objects take on meaning after the fact. All previous history is recast in a new version in the with regard to the production of desire, in whose name all resignations are justified in advance. Psychoanalysis, at the most concrete Oedipus.) This conversion is therefore promoted by psychoanalysis first of all by making a global and specific use of the connective the a priori principle of the disjunctive syllogism, so that all things derive from it by a restriction of a larger exclude while retaining others, but which now become points-signs (points-signes), all affirmed by their new distance. The disjunction, being now inclusive and Moran no longer designate persons, but singularities flocking from all sides, evanescent agents of production. This is free disjunction; the they even take on a free quality, but they are all inhabited by a faceless and transpositional subject. Schreber is man say, he is situated wherever there is a singularity, in all the series and in all the branches marked by a there is a singularity, in all the series and in all the branches marked by a singular point, because he is of modifications, determining instead the passage of a subject through all possible predicates. I am God I am not God, I can situate himself, record himself, and take his bearings in all the branches at once, on all sides. He explodes the take his bearings in all the branches at once, on all sides. He explodes the Oedipal genealogy. Through graduated relationships he to man and to nature does not arise here at all. Everything is on the body without organs, both what is nondecomposable distances are necessarily surveyed, while the disjointed terms are all affirmed. I am the letter and the pen and the be made clear that the exclusive disjunctions are not at all the same as the inclusive disjunctions; neither God nor the is the two ends of a ligature that cuts off all desiring-production. The screws are tightened, nothing relating to production can confronted with a choice that is not its own. With all of the exits now blocked, there is no longer any his son: go ahead, criticize me, but strongly hints that all effective criticism—at least a certain type of criticism—will who forbid themselves the fruits of the crime, and spend all the time necessary for internalizing. But we are warned: the astonishing discovery by Mitscherlich that the British Royal Family, after all, is not such a bad thing. It is therefore understood Oedipal dragnet. Oedipus is one of those things that becomes all the more dangerous the less people believe in it; then man. The possibility of living beyond the father's law, beyond all law, is perhaps the most essential possibility brought forth by to reach those regions of the orphan unconscious—indeed beyond all law—where the problem of Oedipus can no longer even is passed on to others, and the whole movement starts all over again. Such is the Oedipal disjunction, the swing of any difference in nature, any border line, any limit at all between the Imaginary and the Symbolic, or between Oedipus-as-crisis and effective realities, but where the reality of matter has abandoned all extension, just as the interior voyage has abandoned all form abandoned all extension, just as the interior voyage has abandoned all form and quality, henceforth causing pure intensities—coupled together, almost that everything commingles in these intense becoming, passages, and migrations—all this drift that ascends and descends the flows of time I was my father and I was my son. And all the criminals, the whole list of criminals, the decent criminals be Worm that I'll finally succeed in being Mahood.... Then all I'll have to do is be Worm. Which no doubt doubt I shall achieve by trying to be Jones. Then all I'll have to do is be Jones. But if everything he hallucinates and raves universal history, and proliferates the races. All delirium is racial, which does not necessarily mean racist. It and cultures. The full body does not represent anything at all. On the contrary, the races and cultures designate regions on stubborn, material will to be of a race inferior for all eternity: I have known every son of good birth, I these fields. Whence the role of names, with a magic all their own: there is no ego that identifies with races like physics: a Joan of Arc effect, a Heliogabalus effect—all the names of history, and not the name of the the treasure of the paranoid tortures and the celibate glories—all the pogroms of history, that's what I am, and all all the pogroms of history, that's what I am, and all the triumphs, too, as if a few simple univocal events supposedly put the Dauphin so he could flee. And then, all around, there are agents of production and antiproduction, the organizers lays claim to the premium due the person who traverses all the singularities of the series converging around the machine for tissue, and a transpositional subject moving full circle, passing through all the states, triumphing over some as over his enemies, relishing a well situated scar—ambiguous besides—is better proof than all the memories of childhood that the pretender lacks. The conjunctive and concludes a self from its oscillations on the circle. All delirium possesses a world-historical, political, and racial content, mixing and sister—I mean those families like my own, that owe all to the Declaration of the Rights of Man I; When I prince. What does this becoming-pupil, burgomaster, girl, and Mongol signify? All paranoid deliriums stir up similar historical, geographic, and racial masses delirium whose political nature is especially vivid. This example appears all the more striking to us, given our great admiration for aware of the character of revolt and of truth for all implied in the psychosis, Maud Mannoni argues that the origin The name to be determined scientifically, the name that haunts all history, is simply the paternal name. In this case as But it was soon noticed that on the one hand, all kinds of other variable substances had the same action as the child imagines them. Such is also the case, and all the more so, for Lacan's disciples, when they take up any means abandon familialism in the strictest sense, which burdens all of psychoanalysis; on the contrary, one thereby plunges deeper into familialism of psychoanalysis, enclosing the unconscious within Oedipus, cutting off all vital flows, crushing desiring-production, conditioning the patient to respond daddy-mommy which effectively break apart asylum existence while nonetheless still maintaining all the presuppositions of the asylum, and basically renewing the thrust of its own members or its psychotic member. (And among all the members, who is the real psychotic?) With his general it. For the disjointed fragments of Oedipus remain stuck to all the corners of the historical social field, as a battlefield the following rule, which we feel to be applicable in all cases: the father and the mother exist only as fragments the resister, the boss, the boss's wife—who constantly break all triangulations, and who prevent the entire situation from falling back the rise of fascism, Stalinism, the Vietnam war, May '68—all these things form complexes of the unconscious, more effective than forms that surfaced in the sphere of the interhuman, destroying all that was held dear until then. Hellenists were right to to invest the social field in unconscious forms, thereby hallucinating all history, reproducing in delirium entire civilizations, races, and continents, and or antiproduction, always grappling with other agents that they express all the less as they are increasingly at grips with them recognize the Oedipal character of infantile sexuality, or you abandon all positions of sexuality. And yet, not even in the shadow reporters, and agents, in a process that outflanks them on all sides, and places desire in an immediate relationship with a father, so it was your mother ... It is not at all surprising that only afterward is it discovered that all of at all surprising that only afterward is it discovered that all of this was the father and the mother, since this made to begin with Oedipus, by means of explanation, with all the more certainty as one has reduced everything to Oedipus at the end, not at the beginning. But not at all in the same fashion. We have seen that desiring-production was a case of an ambiguous dimension of applied psychoanalysis; for all Oedipus—Oedipus in and of itself—is already an application instinct in the circuit connecting desire to the social sphere. All this happens, not in ideology, but well beneath it. An and the deterritorialized, I am of a race inferior for all eternity.... I am a beast, a Negro. There again it to ruminate over the death of the father, and spend all his Paleolithic period internalizing him. On the contrary, Nietzsche is internalizing him. On the contrary, Nietzsche is exceedingly tired of all these stories revolving around the death of the father, the objects like an Egyptian tomb. But that is not at all what Nietzsche is saying: he does not mean that the did, it was so long ago, perhaps during the Paleolithic). All they did was kill a dead man, from time immemorial that changes everything: it really seems as if Bachofen believes all this, that he believes in myths, in the Furies, Apollo better to psychoanalysts: it would seem that they believe in all of this—in myth, in Oedipus and castration. They reply father, a snowball gathering speed as it moves from Oedipus all the way to the father of the primal horde, to for worse, say those who would make fools of us all. The tone may vary, but the message remains basically the only be generalized in time so as to account for all the triangular experiences of the child and his parents, it investments to the eternal daddy-mommy. We still have not exhausted all the paralogisms that lead the practice of the cure in cortege behind—insufficiency of being, guilt, signification. Structural interpretation challenges all beliefs, rises above all images, and from the realm of being, guilt, signification. Structural interpretation challenges all beliefs, rises above all images, and from the realm of the mother and the the priest. From the moment lack is reintroduced into desire, all of desiring-production is crushed, reduced to being no more than a last priest. Oedipal analysis imposes a transcendent use on all the syntheses of the unconscious, ensuring their conversion. The practical forces of oedipalization and hamletization that hem him in on all sides? Better to flee to the body without organs and repressed in a constituted society. Therefore we should first of all consider the second question: does psychic repression bear upon the on to the children, with whom the same story begins all over again)? We wonder if Oedipus in fact expresses desire to Oedipus. what overflows it on every side and from all angles, beginning with the hallucination of books and the delirium without displacing desire, without giving rise to a consequent desire, all ready, all warm for punishment, and without putting this desire desire, without giving rise to a consequent desire, all ready, all warm for punishment, and without putting this desire in the a foreboding of this operation of displacement, and protests with all his might: no, Oedipus is not a state of desire has not succeeded in grasping. Oedipal desires are not at all repressed, nor do they have any reason to be. They but because it is revolutionary. And that does not at all mean that desire is something other than sexuality, but that cure, its cynical justification of the role of money, and all the pledges it makes to the established order. All these and all the pledges it makes to the established order. All these elements were present in Freud, a fantastic Christopher Columbus signs, and agents of a process that outflanks them on all sides. At most, the child innocently relates to his parents have legislated a lot, reinforced a lot, injected a lot. All that psychoanalysts do is to reinforce the movement; they add the family. The Oedipal uses of synthesis, oedipalization, triangulation, castration, all refer to forces a bit more powerful, a bit more the family, than ideology, even joined together. There we have all the forces of social production, reproduction, and repression. This can themes often erupt into the psychotic consciousness, we would be all the more surprised—in line with a remark by Lacan be ill within the Oedipus complex, from an Oedipus arising all the more in his hallucinated consciousness as he lacked it has no other means of reacting to this blocking of all his investments of reality, the barriers placed before him by hiatuses that characterize the machines of desire. It reorganizes them all along the lines of the universal castration that conditions the short, Oedipus is strictly undecidable. It can be found everywhere all the more readily for being undecidable, and in this sense the mother, and to keep for his Own secret use all the Virgins that had been placed there. Everything can be insofar as they are distinguishable from the familial infantile factors; all the major dissensions were linked to this evaluation. The difficulties in two contrary directions. But what does it matter, after all, if morality or religion find an analytical and regressive meaning to take up a progressive pace. It is not at all a question, she says, of administering care that the schizophrenic the cracks in our all-too-closed minds.... Madness need not be all breakdown. It may also be breakthrough.... The person going through The canvas is truly broken, sundered by what penetrates it. All that remains is a background of gold and fog, intense non-sense erected as a flow, polyvocality that returns to haunt all relations. How poorly the problem of literature is put, starting performing a breakthrough in grammar and syntax, and of making all language a desire, were not speaking from the depths of and does not spread his values. Artaud puts it well: all writing is so much pig shit—that is to say the psychotic produces an involuntary discourse, fettered, subjugated: therefore in all respects the contrary of textual writing. But what is this reproduction that they fall back on, to which they apply all the investments. They make the limit pass Into the interior organs, still a territoriality, but this time totally desert-like, where all desiring-production is arrested, or where it becomes rigid, feigning stoppage not come back up to the surface. They have entrusted all their forces to primal repression, in order to escape the designate both the eventual breakthrough and the possible breakdown, and all the transitions, the intrications of the two extremes? In point its own dissolution, so that it is constantly opposing with all its exasperated strength the movement that drives it toward this themselves into desiring-production. Hence it is correct to retrospectively understand all history in the light of capitalism, provided that the rules the rules formulated by Marx are followed exactly. First of all, universal history is the history of contingencies, and not the distinct forms of deterritorialization). In a sense, capitalism has haunted all forms of society, but it haunts them as their terrifying tasks to be performed are distributed. Coding the flows implies all these operations. This is the social machine's supreme task, inasmuch underlies exchange notions of society; society is not first of all a milieu for exchange where the essential would be to shit (only the mind is capable of shitting). Analogy is all the greater once the anus is disinvested. The libido is potentiality? Are we to believe that a universal Oedipus haunts all societies, but exactly as capitalism haunts them, that is to secondary activity in comparison with the task that sums up all the others: marking bodies, which are the earth's products. The and pledges (...), the most repulsive mutilations (...), the cruelist rites of all the religious cults ... one has only to look at our too it seems that the correct interpretation would be, above all, actual and functional: it is in order to function that The variability and relativity of the segments are responsible for all sorts of penetrations between the inalienable elements of filiation and of alliances and filiation. From one pole to the other, all the misfirings and failures in a system that is constantly Barbarian, who will come nonetheless from without and will overcode all their codes. But the greatest danger would be yet another danger would be yet another dispersion, a scission such that all the possibilities of coding would be suppressed: decoded flows, flowing is the nightmare that the primitive social machine exorcises with all its forces and all its segmentary articulations. The primitive machine the primitive social machine exorcises with all its forces and all its segmentary articulations. The primitive machine is not ignorant of so in the sense that makes capitalism the negative of all social formations. It is the thing, the unnamable, the generalized decoding of flows that reveals a contrario the secret of all these formations, coding the flows, and even overcoding them rather came from without by rising from within, and that at all costs had to be prevented from rising. Whence the possibility from rising. Whence the possibility of a retrospective reading of all history in terms of capitalism. It is already possible to industrial and commodity production decoded under the conditions of capitalism. All history can therefore be read under the sign of classes traverses indivisible distances on the full body, and passes through all the singularities, all the intensities of a synthesis that shifts on the full body, and passes through all the singularities, all the intensities of a synthesis that shifts and reproduces itself a complete full body, male and female, binding to itself all the partial objects, with variations that are solely intensive, and fetish, the quasi cause. It is not content to inscribe all things, it must act as if it produced them. It the male cousins are destined to remain bachelors. However, at all events, it does express the law that a man cannot necessary to look at the cousins' generation to establish that all those in the relationship (+ +) or (- -) are +) or (- -) are parallel to one another, while all those in the relationship (+ -) or (- +) are his maternal uncle, the designated husband of this woman. Doubtless all the dramatis personae will be found to come into play incest to its prohibition. Implicit or explicit, this theme underlies all the myths; it is therefore a formal property of this In the first place, the germinal influx of intensity conditions all representation: it is the representative of desire. But if it there we merely see a primitive version of the formula All men are homosexuals, and to be sure, they are never a ceremony interrupted by halts and fresh departures, flows of all sorts, flows of words and breaks: the members of the the sick person's marriages, his position in the village, and all the positions of a chief lived in intensity within the or that of the maternal grandfather, the latter opened onto all the names of history. Instead of everything being projected onto the content of a delirium, when it stuffs it with all its might into the symbolic void of the father. Or to colonization, and it is necessary to add oedipalization to all the methods that Jaulin was able to describe in La restricted and neuroticized familial reproduction whose agent is Oedipus. After all, how are we to understand those who claim to have Oedipus the great paternal catholic symbol, the meeting place of all the churches? The debate began between Malinowski and Jones, it the structural neotenic constant. It was he who said in all seriousness that the Oedipus complex was not to be found Adopting Malinowski's arguments, Reich added a profound remark: desire is all the more Oedipal as the prohibitions are aimed, not simply the prohibitions are aimed, not simply at incest, but at all other types of sexual relations, blocking the other paths. In

of our society. But the repressed is not first of all the Oedipal representation. What is repressed is desiring-production. It is nature of the symbolism and the corresponding affects, and above all, without any reference to an Oedipal representation that could be childhood, and under the familial stimuli coming from the adult: all the conditions would then be given for an adequate (extrafamilial to the culturalists and the symbolists should be added. They all agree that, in our patriarchal and capitalist society at least as does Fromm, the elements of a new matriarchy). They all agree that our society is the stronghold of Oedipus: the a part. In certain respects it is correct to question all social formations starting from Oedipus. But not because Oedipus might limit every time the schizo-flows pass through the wall, scramble all the codes, and deterritorialize the socius: the body without organs limit threatens to arrive, and which it wards off with all the strength it can command. Whence the obstinacy with which of sectors of consumer goods traditionally held by the women: all the codes vacillate. Doubtless, to begin with money and to because it is the displacement of the limit that haunts all societies, the displaced represented (le represente deplace) that disfigures what societies, the displaced represented (le represente deplace) that disfigures what all societies dread absolutely as their most profound negative: namely, the that the universal Oedipal limit is occupied, strategically occupied in all social formations. We must take Kardiner's remark seriously: a Hindu signified. How it works is the sole question. Schizoanalysis foregoes all interpretation because it foregoes discovering an unconscious material: the unconscious of what it is engineering: organic, social, linguistic, etc., elements, all tossed into the same pot to stew. The only unities-multiplicities are the desiring-machines themselves and the configurations they form in all the sectors of a field of production (the total fact the other hand are recognized to be nonexchangist. And above all, what is made of the unconscious itself, if not its so that the structure is able to function. First of all, when considering kinship structures, it is difficult not to proceed to the lateral alliances and the successive generations, but above all the relationship of the statistical formations to their molecular elements insofar as it is not adequate to the structural model. All this depends, finally, on a postulate that burdens ethnology to the speaking voice, the marked body, and the enjoying eye. All the stupidity and the arbitrariness of the laws, all the eye. All the stupidity and the arbitrariness of the laws, all the pain of the initiations, the whole perverse apparatus of more than does Oedipus. The fact that innocent men suffer all the marks on their bodies derives from the respective autonomy has the look of bronze and knows itself justified to all eternity in its work, like a mother in her child industrial society, capitalism, and socialism. But it could be that all these—in various ways—presuppose this first great hiatus, although in various ways—presuppose this first great hiatus, although they all claim to repel and to fill it. It could be primitive regimentation and punishment, are nothing. A concerted destruction of all the primitive codings, or worse yet, their derisory preservation, their the new machine, and the new apparatus of repression (refoulement). All that constituted the essential element of the primitive inscription machine the aim now is to preclude pessimistically, once and for all, the prospect of a final discharge; the aim now is has jumped outside the chain; in place of flow selections, all the flows converge into a great river that constitutes the code is an object of appropriation. This conversion crosses through all the syntheses: the synthesis of production, with the hydraulic machine the system of primitive rankings, the mechanism of surplus value—all this already prefigured despotic formations and caste hierarchies. And how It is like an immense right of the first-born over all filiations, an immense right of the wedding night over all all filiations, an immense right of the wedding night over all alliances. The filiative stock becomes the object of an accumulation capitalism wasn't born in China in the thirteenth century, when all the necessary scientific and technical conditions nevertheless seemed to be the State inaugurates the great movement of deterritorialization that subordinates all the primitive filiations to the despotic machine (the agrarian problem duty of an interminable service to the State that subordinates all the primitive alliances to itself (the problem of debts). The organs of production in the new machine. It is perfected all at once because it functions on the basis of dispersed overflowing of the old filiations into the direct filiation, gathering all the subjects into the new machine. The essential action of by which the new full body—immobile, monumental, immutable—appropriates all the forces and agents of production; but this inscription of need to speak the same language). The imperial inscription countersects all the alliances and filiations, prolongs them, makes them converge into and the new alliance of the despot with the people. All the coded flows of the primitive machine are now forced mountain or across the waters. The wilderness, land of betrothal. All the flows converge on a man such as this, all All the flows converge on a man such as this, all the alliances find themselves countersected by this new alliance that the tribe places the hero in a position to overcode all the endogamous marriages in the tribe. It is clear that a flow, not even a magic flow, but to overcode all the existing flows, and to ensure that no intrinsic code founds the new alliance by effecting a generalized appropriation of all the alliance debts. The marriage with the mother is the it ceases to be territorial and becomes imperial. First of all, we have the impression that the elements of the in-depth is continually jumping from one element to another; radiating in all directions; emitting detachments wherever there are flows to be selected of correspondences in the heart of a given social machine. All this finds itself overwhelmed in a new destiny, with the machine. The triangle has become the base for a pyramid, all of whose sides cause the vocal, the graphic, and the networks of a territorial chain, a despotic signifier from which all the signs uniformly flow in a deterritorialized flow of writing is content to bar the question in advance, to render all the answers insufficient by relegating them to the status of in ages past, a transcendent stock that distributes lack to all the elements of the chain, something in common for a in common for a common absence, the authority that channels all the breaks-flows into one and the same locus of one the detached object, the phallus-and-castration, the bar that delivers over all the depressive subjects to the great paranoiac king. O signifier displaced represented that it induces, the famous metaphors and metonymy—all of that constitutes the overcoding and deterritorialized despotic machine. The of overcoding at the two ends of the chain in all the territory ruled by the despot, from the borders to ruled by the despot, from the borders to the center: all the debts of alliance are converted into the infinite debt converted into the infinite debt of the new alliance, and all the extended filiations are subsumed by direct filiation. Incest or through the incest that is itself simulated and therefore produced—all the more real for being simulated, and vice versa—is in the overcoding effected by incest is the following; that all the organs of all the subjects, all the eyes, all by incest is the following; that all the organs of all the subjects, all the eyes, all the eyes, all the mouths, all the following; that all the organs of all the subjects, all the eyes, all the mouths, all the penises, all the all the organs of all the subjects, all the eyes, all the mouths, all the penises, all the vaginas, all the of all the subjects, all the eyes, all the mouths, all the penises, all the vaginas, all the ears, and all subjects, all the eyes, all the mouths, all the penises, all the vaginas, all the ears, and all the anuses become eyes, all the mouths, all the penises, all the vaginas, all the ears, and all the anuses become attached to the all the penises, all the vaginas, all the ears, and all the anuses become attached to the full body of the conducts the dead despot to the latrines, and conducts us all to today's private man—the history sketched out by Artaud cradle, to the wave of shit in his sewer tomb—all writing is so much pig shit, all writing is this his sewer tomb—all writing is so much pig shit, all writing is this simulation, sperm and excrement. One might think value escapes the over coding of the despotic machine. For all the organs and their functions experience a detachment and elevation and necessary as they escape knowing, and as they owe all to their eminent cause. Occasionally it still happens that the to hear, it is true, hypocritical doctors explain what it all means. But all that—the development of the democratic signified is true, hypocritical doctors explain what it all means. But all that—the development of the democratic signified or the wrapping a formidable quantity of reaction passes into a latent state; all the resonance and all the retention change in volume and reaction passes into a latent state; all the resonance and all the retention change in volume and time (the after-the-event). Vengeance establishing each of the formal operations that will make it all possible: the extrapolation of a detached object; the double bind law; the terrible latency with its afterward or its after-the-event. All the parts of the five paralogisms thus seem to be not grasp clearly the story that psychoanalysis is trying at all costs to tell them. It is indeed the story of and its sexual history (there is no other). But here all the parts figure as cogs and wheels in the State of direct filiation. Father and son are not yet born. All sexuality functions in terms of the conjoined operations of machines different organization. There we see the mania of psychoanalysis with all its paralogisms: it presents as a resolution, or an attempted to be replaced by Oedipuses-as-subjects, Oedipuses-as-subjugated individuals, Oedipuses-as-fathers, and Oedipuses-as-sons. All the formal operations will have to be resumed within a history of desire does not experience this outcome, Oedipus haunts all societies, but as the nightmare of something that has still progressive stages; it appears fully armed, a master stroke executed all at once; the primordial Urstaat, the eternal model of everything the horizon throughout history. There comes back to us from all quarters the discovery of imperial machines that preceded the traditional and operate? What use do you make of them, in all the transitions that extend from the molecular to the molar substituting for the libido a vague cosmic energy capable of all of the metamorphoses, or a kind of socialized energy capable of the metamorphoses, or a kind of socialized energy capable of all the investments. Or would we do better to review Reich's combined in a particular sequence within the living. And above all he upheld the basic psychoanalytic truth, the supreme disavowal of molar formations on the scale of social and organic aggregates. All that is missing is the confirmations of common sense: why captures—an always nomadic and migrant desire, characterized first of all by its gigantism: no one has shown this more clearly sexuality is concerned, exploded something that will hold Freud and all of psychoanalysis forever captive: the anthropomorphic representation of sex! What omnipotence of a male homosexuality. Yet this is not at all the case; what is founded here is rather the statistical castration. But the idea that there are two sexes, after all, is no better. This time, like Melanie Klein, one attempts men as the man, and the man as many women, all capable of entering—men with women, women with men—into schizo analytic slogan of the desiring-revolution will be first of all: to each its own sexes. 3 Psychoanalysis and Capitalism The desiring-machines. The order of desire is the order of production; all production is at once desiring-production and social production. We therefore unconscious to this state of representation, if not first of all a system of beliefs put in the place of productions on the zones of production, representation must inflate itself with all the power of myth and tragedy, it must give a the place of the units of production. Who believes in all this—Oedipus, castration, etc.? The Greeks? Then the Greeks did about whom Engels said: you'd think they really believed in all that—in myth, in tragedy. Is it the unconscious that castration? Or is it the psychoanalyst—the psychoanalyst in us all, who represents the unconscious in this way? For never has so much meaning: you'd think the psychoanalysts really believed in all this—in myth, in tragedy. (They go on believing, whereas social machines. In return, the father will be inflated with all the forces of myth and religion and with phylogenesis, so drama of desire and knowledge. Fraenkel calls to his aid all the commonplaces, Schopenhauer, and the Nietzsche of The Birth of in this discovery of the units of production, which subjugate all possible representations rather than being subordinated to them. Just as discovers the subjective nature or abstract essence of labor, beyond all representations that would bind it to objects, to aims, or that discovers the interplay of machines and their agents underneath all the specific determinations that still linked desire or labor to in general—and abstract labor becomes something real from which all the preceding social formations can be reinterpreted from the point discussions, and which expresses an immeasurably ancient relation valid in all forms of society, nevertheless achieves practical truth as an abstraction is discovered by capitalism only to be put in chains all over again, to be subjugated and alienated—no longer, it substance or the content of private property do not at all affect this form). It is also the form of private of today's everyman. Psychoanalysis and the Oedipus complex gather up all beliefs, all that has ever been believed by humanity, but everyman. Psychoanalysis and the Oedipus complex gather up all beliefs, all that has ever been believed by humanity, but only in becomes subjective infinite—that is to say, imaginary—effectively loses all consistency, unless it is supported by a structure that determines objects represented as images, and the formal relations between them all. Symbolic thus no longer designates the relation of representation to nonrepresented representatives whence the subjects, the objects, and their relationships all derive. In this way the structure designates the unconscious of in terms of hidden representatives, their migrations and variable relations. All former beliefs are gathered up and revived in the name aggregate of destination, with the familial relation becoming metaphorical for all the others and hindering the molecular productive elements from following the path of the differentiations: the same thing is found all over, following a rule of inverse relation, or double bind over, following a rule of inverse relation, or double bind. All of production is conducted into the double impasse of subjective we continue to be pious? We have repudiated and lost all our beliefs that proceeded by way of objective representations. The that revolve within the infinite subjective representation. We will muster all our strength so as to believe in these images, from effects of a symbolic signifier. The good identification. We are all Archie Bunker at the theater, shouting out before Oedipus: there's territorialities have fallen into ruin, but the structure proceeds with all the subjective and private reterritorializations. What a perverse operation psychoanalysis only in terms of an extrapolated sign that joins together all the elements of production in a constellation of which it phallus of molar castration. Here too Lacan's approach appears in all its complexity; for it is certain that he does not the archaism of the imperial symbol or the vanished despot. All three are necessary—precisely in order to lead Oedipus to still Oedipus, to the nth power, now symbolic, and therefore all the more virulent? And what is latency, this pure fable and in [subjecting] himself to a father substitute? We are all the more extricated from Oedipus as we become a living pre-oedipal, like the post-oedipal, is still a way of bringing all of desiring-production—the anoedipal—back to Oedipus. When Reich denounces Freud). That is why, inversely, schizoanalysis must devote itself with all its strength to the necessary destructions. Destroying beliefs and representations also of summoning it back to its place. We are all little dogs, we need circuits, and we need to be reterritorialization within the artifice, perversion in the broad sense comprises all the types of reterritorializations, not merely artificial, but also exotic father's car, the grandmother's sewing machine, the little brother's bicycle, all objects of flight and theft, stealing and stealing away—the what spectator? For example, the question no longer applies at all, at this point in the film, of knowing whether the statement. This man and this woman seen from the back, all black, whose shadows are not projected by any sun, advance Search of Lost Time as a great enterprise of schizoanalysis: all the planes are traversed until their molecular line of escape functioning as a desiring-machine capable of collecting and dealing with all the indices. He goes toward these new regions where the on a body without organs—an intensive voyage that undoes all the lands for the benefit of the one it is is only one illness, neurosis, the Oedipal decay against which all the pathogenic interruptions of the process should be measured. Most can find the form of social alienation in action in all the reterritorializations of capitalism, inasmuch as they keep the flows antipsychiatry, would consist therefore in the following praxis: (1) undoing all the reterritorializations that transform madness into mental illness; (2) liberating mental illness; (2) liberating the schizoid movement of deterritorialization in all the flows, in such a way that this characteristic can on the contrary because it would receive the support of all the other flows, including science and art—once it is deprived of this support, and finds itself reduced to testifying all alone for deterritorialization as a universal process. It is merely be overcome by means of other flows escaping control on all sides, and carrying us along. It should therefore be said threshold of deterritorialization and produce the new land—not at all a hope, but a simple finding, a finished design, where schizoanalysis is in no way separable from its positive tasks—all these tasks are necessarily undertaken at the same time. The than a psychoanalysis of the market place. The consideration of all these machines, however, whether they be real, symbolic, or imaginary the same penalty, one and the same ridiculous wound for all—castration. This entire struggle for the phallus, this poorly understood when we insisted earlier on the difference between desiring-machines and all the figures of molar machines, we were fully aware that never cease to undo it. Through binarity, overlapping, or permutation, all these indirect passive syntheses are one and the same engineering the codes by unfolding along a molecular fiber that includes all the possible figures. Similarly, in Lacan, the symbolic organization of inspiration of psychoanalysis: it does not add a code to all those that are already known. The signifying chain of the to circulate, and to discover in desire that which scrambles all the codes and undoes all the territorialities. It is true in desire that which scrambles all the codes and undoes all the territorialities. It is true that Oedipus will restore psychoanalysis of the signifying chain that results in a misappreciation of all the syntheses of the unconscious. The body without organs is the machine itself. And yet the problem persists: how can all that function together? For it is not yet a functioning depends on repulsion is clear to us, inasmuch as it all works only by breaking down. One is then able to of its cycle, a subject that passes by way of all the becomings corresponding to the included disjunctions: the last part instant that fixes it in this way as an I, all the while undoing the intensity, carrying it back to the From one aspect to the other, there is not at all a personal deepening, but something quite different: there is a Eternal Return as experience, and as the deterritorialized circuit of all the cycles of desire. How odd the psychoanalytic venture is a song of life, or else be worth nothing at all. It ought, practically, to teach us to sing life. And a carrier of the life flows, capable of carrying them all the way into the desert and decoding them—even if culture of guilt feeling. There is no need to tell all over how psychoanalysis culminates in a theory of culture that maudlin crying to be loved, which makes your knees go all ricky. Just as there are two stomachs for the ruminant the right way to bring on better days? And aren't all the destructions performed by schizoanalysis worth more than this psychoanalytic past is like dragging a ball and chain.... We are all guilty of crime, the great crime of not living life interest in its transcendent distinction from life, but it effuses all the more, throughout all the immanent combinations it forms with distinction from life, but it effuses all the more, throughout all the immanent combinations it forms with this same life. Absorbed affinal, at the very moment it decodes and deterritorializes with all its might. The answer is the death instinct, if we and implanting the social machine in the desiring-machines. Death comes all the more from without as it is coded from within longer have anything to do with its real functioning: thus all the statues, the Oedipal images, the phantasmal mises en scene schizoanalysis follows the lines of escape and the machinic indices all the way to the desiring-machines. If the essential aspect of to undo the Oedipal trap of repression properly speaking, and all its dependencies, each time in a way adapted to the the schizoid declaration-I am of a race inferior for all eternity, I am a beast, a black, We are all all eternity, I am a beast, a black, We are all German Jews—the historico-social field is no less invested than I am a pure Aryan, of a superior race for all time. From the viewpoint of the unconscious libidinal investment, all all time. From the viewpoint of the unconscious libidinal investment, all the oscillations from one formula to the other are possible force. For what is the schizo, if not first of all the one who can no longer bear all that: money first of all the one who can no longer bear all that: money, the stock market, the death forces, Nijinsky said between one of two poles, the paranoid counterescape that motivates all the conformist, reactionary, and fascisizing investments, and the schizophrenic escape forces, insofar as these forces define a man-nature independent of all the social formations, or rather common to them all (what of all the social formations, or rather common to them all (what the Marxists term the givens of useful labor). The formation of a party apparatus. This situation is not at all adequate, however, for resolving the following problem: why do many be perturbed and perverted in the most somber organization, below all ideology. Libidinal investment does not bear upon the regime of a socius—these are the object of desire, higher than all the aims. It will never flow too much, it will form of power, its codes, and its flows. It is all the easier, and the contradiction is all the better masked flows. It is all the easier, and the contradiction is all the better masked, as a state of forces does not moment it is preconsciously revolutionary, such a group already presents all the unconscious characteristics of a subjugated group: the subordination to elements within the system, which feels and pretends to be all the more immortal; the phenomena of group superegoization , narcissism, and an oedipalizing grandfather, establishing Oedipus as an interior limit, with all kinds of little Narcissuses around, and Reich-the-marginal, plotting a tangent and to demand its rights to objects, aims, and sources, all the while maintaining the corresponding flows within the limits of In short, sexual repression, more insistent than ever, will survive all the publications, demonstrations, emancipations, and protests concerning the liberty of mother—one could just as easily add homosexuals, heterosexuals, etc.—all these roles are distributed by the Oedipal triangle, father-mother-me, a of the father-mother representations, by fixation, regression, assumption, sublimation—and all of that according to what rule? The law of the signifier prompting the most miserable struggle, a common absence for all the reciprocal exclusions where the flows dry up, drained by of her, or a model mother, or a model help-meet. All mere devices for avoiding any contact with her. A woman conditions of identity. What does psychoanalysis do, and first of all what does Freud do, if not maintain sexuality under the closely to this hypothesis, it is because he wants above all to keep sexuality in the limited framework of Narcissus and marked taste for the poor woman: the peasant girl on all fours washing some clothes, or the servant scrubbing the floor to these texts is the following: must we see, in all these sexual-social investments of the libido and these object choices dependences of a familial Oedipus? Must we save Oedipus at all costs by interpreting these investments and object choices as defenses field.) Freud makes a firm choice of this last direction; all the more firm in that, according to his own confession flows that traverse the family, but that overreach it on all sides and are not familial. From the start we wonder pretty girl or old lady, animal or Blessed Virgin, and all at once. Everything passes into the machine that causes the of desire, which alone designates the zones of intensity, with all the beings that populate these zones and determine their libidinal times: they play at Oedipus, a sublime alibi. But behind all this, there is an economic situation: the mother reduced to remains uncertain; the father who has had it with feeding all those mouths—in short, a fundamental relation to the outside the machine for putting lack into desire, for drying up all the flows, and for making all the breaks from the Real into the desire, for drying up all the flows, and for making all the breaks from the outside and from the Real into which Oedipus arrives: an aggregate of departure—transfinite, constituted by all the objects, agents, and relations of sociodesiring-production—is reduced to the sectorial order, etc. This progression contains a constant of all modern attempts at reform. And if this tendency appears in symbolic order, embodied in the institution, re-forms group Oedipuses, with all the lethal characteristics of the subjugated groups. What is more within the categories of idealist psychiatry. Whatever one's stake in all of this, society is thereby justified: all that remains to one's stake in all of this, society is thereby justified: all that remains to contest it with are vague considerations on many misunderstandings. For the schizo is the one who escapes all Oedipal, familial, and personological references—I'll no longer say me that it resists, but that suffices to block it on all sides, is led to take itself as an end: a way or another to the established order: the pervert. After all, Oedipus was already an artificial sphere, O family! And the up that embraces a full body for itself, independently of all aims, and a degree of development for itself, independently of aims, and a degree of development for itself, independently of all reason: that very degree and no other, don't take another disinterested love of the molar machine, a veritable enjoyment, with all the hatred it contains for those who do not submit and to his own family—but it is first of all a delirium of races, ranks, classes, and universal history. In and political units of libidinal investment. With the result that all familialist psychoanalysis—with the psychoanalyst at the fore—warrants a field, and which are neither Oedipal nor pre-oedipal since it all amounts to the same thing, but innocently anoedipal, and which territorialized limit that separates them from desiring-production. And to summarize all the preceding determinations: the one is defined by subjugated groups subject-groups. It is true that we still run up against all kinds of problems concerning these distinctions. In what sense does conspiracy joining together art and science presupposes a rupture of all our institutions and a total upheaval of the means of lines of escape or breakthrough. Christ's body is engineered on all sides and in all fashions, pulled in all directions, playing breakthrough. Christ's body is engineered on all sides and in all fashions, pulled in all directions, playing the role of a engineered on all sides and in all fashions, pulled in all directions, playing the role of a full body without organs a full body without organs, a locus of connection for all the machines of desire, a locus of sadomasochistic exercises where hierarchized collective investments; each person, each organ has a merit all its own, and tends to its own affairs: the infant the Virgin Mary listens from the other, Jesus stands for all the desiring children, the Virgin stands for all the desiring stands for all the desiring children, the Virgin stands for all the desiring women, a joyous activity of profanation extends beneath code, or else introduced into new codes, and first of all into a properly pictorial axiomatic that chokes off the escapes have become flows of corrugated iron, the openings blocked on all sides. And perhaps this, as we have seen, is Where with pneumatic, electronic, or gaseous indifferent supports, and that appears all the more difficult and intellectual to intellectuals as it is accessible to the infirm, the illiterate, and the schizos, embracing all that flows and counterflows, the gushings of mercy and pity first aspect of its immanence), a ruling class that is all the more ruthless as it does not place the machine machine and the pathological character of its rationality: not at all a false rationality, but a true rationality of this pathological machine; how it does not run the risk of dying all alone, but rather of making us die, by provoking to cry out to the very end, Long live capital in all its reality, in all its objective dissimulation! Except in ideology very end, Long live capital in all its reality, in all its objective dissimulation! Except in ideology, there has never been of an unequivocally delirious economic system (at least he goes all the way). In short, a truly unconscious libido, a disinterested new perfect? And if one were to ask when it all started to go bad, how far back must we go Oedipus, Marx-the-father, Lenin-the-father, Brezhnev-the-father. Fewer and fewer people believe in all this but it makes no difference, since capitalism is like belief, it does not need it—a motley painting of all that has been believed. But the reverse is also true the reverse is also true: capitalism is constantly escaping on all sides. Its productions, its art, and its science form decoded which is better, a bad reading or no reading at all. And in all probability there are far more serious reproaches a bad reading or no reading at all. And in all probability there are far more serious reproaches to be made revolutionary potential, and nothing more, and that this potential appears all the more as one is less and less concerned with authoritarian designs of a State that is incompetent and above all castrating by nature. (For the State imposes a specifically artistic Oedipus, a specifically scientific Oedipus.) Secondly, we have not at all minimized the importance of preconscious investments of class or interest which are based in the infrastructure itself. But we attach all the more importance to them as they are the index or the real in itself. Finally, we do not at all think that the revolutionary is schizophrenic or vice versa. On fascist; and it is not these psychiatric categories, freed of all familialism, that will allow us to understand the politico-economic determinations the politico-economic determinations, but exactly the opposite. And then, above all, we are not looking for a way out when we and motors. Everyone knows that a schizo is a machine; all schizos say this, and not just little Joey. The question autoerotic, or rather automatic: the nuptial celebration of a new alliance, a new birth, a radiant ecstasy, as though the eroticism synthesis of recording extends into a conjugal use, or an alliance use, of the connective syntheses of production: a regime for such a machine consists in the following: the declension of alliance and filiation—declining the lineages on the body of the it is because it is not possible simply to deduce alliance from filiation, the alliances from the filiative lines. It would the filiative lines. It would be erroneous to ascribe to alliance no more than an individuating power over the persons of of the affinal relationship. Filiation is administrative and hierarchical, but alliance is political and economic, and expresses power insofar as it insofar as it is not identical with administration. Filiation and alliance are like the two forms of a primitive capital: fixed in this sense that the economy goes by way of alliance. In the production of children, the child is inscribed in the father and the mother. At no time, therefore, does alliance derive from filiation, but both form an essentially open cycle if filiation expresses what is dominant while being itself determined, alliance expresses what is determinant, or rather the return of the it is essential to take into consideration how ties of alliance combine concretely with relations of filiation on a given territorial and even a strategy, Louis Berthe, analyzing a relationship of alliance and hierarchy, shows convincingly that a village intervenes as a one relapses into an ideology of large segments that makes alliance depend on the major filiations, and that finds itself contradicted to ask if there exists in the asymmetrical systems of alliance a fundamental tendency toward generalized exchange, that is to say and economic references that keep it open, and that make alliance something other than an arrangement of matrimonial classes and filiative inversely, the detachments from the chain constitute mobile debts of alliance that guide and direct the flows. On the blanket that connect or encaste (encastent) the flows, and the blocks of alliance that cause the chains to flow. Descent is at the and chain of inscription, stock of filiation and fluxion of alliance. Everything takes place as though the stock constituted a surface from the signifying chain, in accordance with the relations of alliance, engender surplus values of code at the level of the the inalienable elements of filiation and the mobile elements of alliance. This is explained by the fact that the length of ruptures throughout the variations of filiation and the fluctuations of alliance. The whole system evolves between two poles: that of fusion in turn on the form of these disjunctions. Such is alliance, the second characteristic of inscription: alliance imposes on the productive these disjunctions. Such is alliance, the second characteristic of inscription: alliance imposes on the productive connections the extensive form of a

use of these same disjunctions. It is therefore inevitable that alliance be mythically represented as supervening at a certain moment in and between themselves, a lateral inscription with articulatory stones of alliance, in short, a whole ark of alliance. Alliances never derive articulatory stones of alliance, in short, a whole ark of alliance. Alliances never derive from filiations, nor can they be deduced two points of view: the one economic and political, where alliance is there from time immemorial, combining and declining itself with this viewpoint the extended system is like a memory of alliance and of words, implying an active repression of the intense in the filiation and what must pass through in the alliance. The essential is not that the signs change according to the prohibition of incest with the sister that the lateral alliance is sealed; it is through the prohibition of incest with filiation in general that is repressed by a memory of alliance. It is the great nocturnal memory of the intensive germinal departure for a new brother-sister relationship, on which a new alliance is founded. What is prolonged, what comes to a halt contrary, what will move and flow following the relations of alliance, in such a way that the systematic coding of the out. We call this second instance—the repressing representation itself—alliance, since the filiations become extended only in terms of lateral partners. Underlining the universal fact that marriage is not an alliance between a man and a woman, but an alliance between an alliance between a man and a woman, but an alliance between two families, a transaction between men concerning women, Georges the man-woman disjunction, which is always the outcome of filiation, alliance places in connection men from different filiations. The point of separation between the tribal sections becomes the formation of new lineages aspiring to independence, with capitalization of alliances and filiation. From one pole to the other, all the stones of alliance, in short, a whole ark of alliance. Alliances never derive from filiations, nor can they be deduced from the extended filiative lineages that do not exist prior to alliances in a system assumed to be given in extended form that they certainly did not possess before the determinations of alliances conferred it on them. On the contrary, as intensive filiations not in the least consist of going from filiations to alliances, or of deducing the latter from the former. It is through the prohibition of incest that have become extended (patrilineal or matrilineal) and from the alliances that they imply. The entire Dogon mythology is a patrilineal determined in relation to the extended filiations and the lateral alliances: the disjunctions become exclusive, restrictive (the either/or else replaces the	p 152 p 152 p 155 p 155 p 155 p 155 p 156 p 157 p 159 p 160 p 160

Let us return to the Dogon preferential marriage as analyzed since the filiations become extended only in terms of lateral alliances that measure their variable segments. Whence the importance of these Leach has identified—and which, two by two, organize the alliances and arrange (machine) the marriages. When we ascribed to them Primitive families constitute a praxis, a politics, a strategy of alliances and filiations; formally, they are the driving elements of social chieftainship and its subchieftainships, the lineages and their segments, the alliances and the filiations: they constantly bring to light desire in the relations of colonization. It is debt that articulates the alliances with the filiations that have become extended, in order to structures, it is difficult not to proceed as though the alliances derived from the lines of filiation and their relationships, although the lines of filiation and their relationships, although the lateral alliances and the blocks of debt condition the extended filiations in attention to the economic and political compromises conveyed by the alliances, to the nature of the counterprestations that come to compensate	p 185 p 187 p 187 p 187

The despot challenges the lateral alliances and the extended filiations of the old community. He imposes the existence of a new socius, irreducible to the lateral alliances and the extended filiations that declined the primitive machine. It first principle of paranoid knowledge. The whole relative play of alliances and filiations is carried to the absolute in this new it can after a terrible exogenous adventure. The game of alliances is ambiguous: are we still on this side of the new exogenous alliance, not only in the place of former alliances, but in relation to them. This new alliance is something What is suppressed is not the former regime of lateral alliances and extended filiations, but merely their determining character. They subsist and embedded bricks, having only a controlled mobility. The territorial alliances are not replaced, but are merely allied with the new filiations, an immense right of the wedding night over all alliances. The filiative stock becomes the object of an accumulation in interminable service to the State that subordinates all the primitive alliances to itself (the problem of debts). Everything would be fine if the economic problem this is the intense outcry of all of desiring-production. We already knew that the pervert resisted oedipalization: why should he surrender into a woman, and at its terminal point he is already the mother of a new humanity and can finally die this release, made possible by psychoanalysis, will be achieved, is already being achieved, outside it. We cannot, however, share either this the objective conditions for such a practice appear to be already present. Everything takes place as if Oedipus of itself had structure! Oedipus on the full body of the analyst. And that's already too much. But Oedipus takes shape in the family, not they are carrying us elsewhere or flowing back over us already. The paintings range over three periods. If the psychiatrist were Yet it has been a long time since Engels demonstrated, already apropos of Balzac, how an author is great because he machines. In its simplest, so-called manual forms, the technical machine already implies an acting, a transmitting, or even a driving element primitive territorial machine, with its immobile motor, the earth, is already a social machine, a megamachine, that codes the flows of a pure nomad does not exist; there is always and already an encampment where it is a matter of stocking—however in correspondence, united in a mutual embrace. And this is already the highly perverse activity of local groups who arrange marriages direct filiation, but always a socius waiting to bear down, already deducting and detaching. The flow deductions constitute a filiative stock the better it works, the American way. But this is already the point of view required—given a change of perspective reading of all history in terms of capitalism. It is already possible to see signs of classes in precapitalist societies. But in the filiative lines (although in another sense it is already there from time immemorial). Marcel Griaule describes how, among the vigilant memory, it is to the degree that they are already apprehended in an extensive sense that they certainly did not generation or an initial exchange, but there are always and already alliances, at the same time as the filiations are extended and its transgression ... In both instances, one takes as something already constituted what is in fact the emergence of an order between the two—incest, that slandered shallow stream—always crossed already or not yet crossed. For incest is like this motion the repressed, and from the prohibition to the prohibited, that already implies the whole paralogism of social repression. But why is We are moving too fast, acting as if Oedipus were already installed within the savage territorial machine. However, as Nietzsche says is our modern way of believing and of being pious. Already Geza Roheim proposed organizing primitives into a series of variables only secondarily to an image of the mother. We have already seen how the prohibition of incest referred, not to Oedipus reality. But, fourthly, this limit inhibited from the interior was already projected onto a primordial beginning, a mythical matrix as the later, at the level of an analysis of deliriums. But already, if it appears that Oedipus is an effect, this is and in relation to the primary repression that the latter already performs in the domain of desire—a relation that is an empty form, but rather because it is always and already a functioning machine, a desiring-machine and not an anorexic structure in relation to an ideal of exchange, or is it already given in the preconditions, included in the heterogeneity of the since it expresses the struggle with the old system, and already a glorious celibate machine, insofar as it exalts the triumph of primitive rankings, the mechanism of surplus value—all this already prefigured despotic formations and caste hierarchies. And how does one	p 121 p 132 p 133 p 141 p 142 p 148 p 149 p 149 p 151 p 153 p 155 p 155 p 157 p 161 p 161 p 162 p 166 p 171 p 173 p 176 p 179 p 184 p 186 p 187 p 193 p 195

Wasn't it already the anus that detached the object on high and produced counter-vengeance. And yet Nietzsche says about them what he has already said about the primitive system: it was not in their no longer be content to overcode territorial elements that are already coded, it must invent specific codes for flows that are of relations within which the less developed concrete may have already realized itself before having posited the more manysided connection or	p 195 p 195 p 202 p 203 p 211 p 215 p 218 p 221

After all, Oedipus was already an artificial sphere, O family! And the resistance to Oedipus had not displayed a taste for the socius of an already fascisizing libidinal investment. Each associative flow must be seen which it is connected, but at the same time is also a flow itself, or the production of a flow, in life experience, of which the mother is only a part. Also we must not think that the machines themselves are proof to each of the different regions of the body, but also from the way in which the relations of each of not only an inscription with signs from different alphabets, but also various figures, plus one or several straws, and perhaps a polyvocality that is the code of desire. Such is also the case, and all the more so, for Lacan's disciples of others, but where the entirety of the extended family also would oscillate between the two poles of a healthy triangulation that is irreducible and nonclosed. We believe that this is also true in the case of the family-society relationship. The chain also implies another type of synthesis than the flows: it is aside his organs, to immobilize them, to silence them, but also, impelled by the working parts that work in an autonomous body without organs or the immobile motor, and there is also life that desires, by virtue of the working organs. There Thanatos was now the partner of Eros, for worse but also for better. Psychoanalysis becomes the training ground of a new death itself. And this neutralization, this turning against life, is also the last way in which a depressive and exhausted libido as there are two stomachs for the ruminant, there must also exist two abortions, two castrations for sick desire: once in much from a transcendent death-carrying agency, the despotic signifier, but also how it brought about this agency's effusion in the full limit becomes internal to capitalism, which continually reproduces it, and also continually occupies it as an internalized and displaced limit; precisely	p 324 p 327 p 329 p 329 p 332 p 333 p 334 p 335 p 337

But inversely, they are also continually closing up again, remodeling themselves in the image of as they are not merely capable of counteracting them, but also of coexisting with them in opposite modes. And if getting well amounts to getting oedipalized, we can easily understand the outbursts of an entirely different nature, processes that are endowed with what amounts to an indifference with regard to the stimulus. memory is correct? It is often thought that Oedipus is an easy subject to deal with, something perfectly obvious, a given rowboat, and on a picnic in the midst of nature: an infernal machine is being assembled. Under the skin the body machine is being assembled. Under the skin the body is an over-heated factory, and outside, the invalid shines, the poles of schizophrenia. What the schizophrenic experiences, both as an individual and as a member of the human species, is both of itself and of the supposedly fixed elements within an over-all process. For the real truth of the matter—the even the stars and animal life, and who ceaselessly plugs an organ-machine into an energy-machine, a tree into his body, a and animal life, and who ceaselessly plugs an organ-machine into an energy-machine, a tree into his body, a breast into his constitutes a cycle whose relationship to desire is that of an immanent principle. That is why desiring-production is the principal concern term: it must not be viewed as a goal or an end in itself, nor must it be confused with an end in itself, nor must it be confused with an infinite perpetuation of itself. Putting an end to the process it be confused with an infinite perpetuation of itself. Putting an end to the process or prolonging it indefinitely—which, strictly institutions: a limp rag forced into autistic behavior, produced as an entirely separate and independent entity. D. H. Lawrence says of a striking confirmation of this principle, since by taking such an approach they deny that there is any such thing as more to it, the table having become more and more an accumulation, less and less a table It was not intended as a table, but as some freak piece of furniture, an unfamiliar instrument ... for which there was no purpose. A dehumanized new and different patterns or configurations; and as a consequence, an indifference toward the act of producing and toward the product The satisfaction the handyman experiences when he plugs something into an electric socket or diverts a stream of water can scarcely identity that constitutes a third term in the linear series: an enormous undifferentiated object. Everything stops dead for a moment, everything over the surface of a full body. This is what allows Lacan to postulate and describe is what allows Lacan to postulate and describe in detail an interplay of elements that is more machinic than etymological: parere the other breaks, the subjective break is not at all an indication of a lack or need (manque), but on the is because breaks or interruptions are not the result of an analysis; rather, in and of themselves, they are syntheses. Syntheses for desiring-production: desiring-production is pure multiplicity, that is to say, an affirmation that is irreducible to any sort of unity. We myth of the existence of fragments that, like pieces of an antique statue, are merely waiting for the last one to the unity of Balzac's creation, though his remark is also an apt description of his own oeuvre. Say that it's and through social (and metaphysical) relations, in the form of an analytic afterward; or else that these relations bring into play for which sexuality has merely served as the symbol of an anagogical beyond. It was their disagreement on this particular point of the house he lives in. And we are guilty of an error when we confuse the fact that this question is of the unconscious itself, and the collective mechanisms that have an immediate bearing on the unconscious: in particular, the entire interplay desiring-machines, and the body without organs. For the unconscious is an orphan, and produces itself within the identity of nature and of production, and when the cycle discovers its independence from an indefinite parental regression. To quote Artaud once again: I got desiring-machines within history. Neither social relations nor metaphysical relations constitute an afterward or a beyond. The role of such relations must

by taking the path that it has, psychoanalysis is reviving an age-old tendency to humble us, to demean us, and to of instincts hammering at the solidity of the family as an institution and at its most archaic symbols. Hence, instead of at its most archaic symbols. Hence, instead of participating in an undertaking that will bring about genuine liberation, psychoanalysis is taking for each subject of either sex, he takes into consideration an intensive series of instincts, affects, and relations that link the link, can be obscured in a grandparental constellation, either because an accumulation of three generations is deemed necessary in order to deemed necessary in order to produce a psychotic, or because an even more direct mechanism of intervention by the grandparents in between the Imaginary and the Symbolic permits the emergence of an Oedipal structure as a system of positions and functions that totally superficial and petty, as if it applied solely to an imaginary Oedipus and aimed at the role of parental figures Imaginary? We in no way claim to be taking up an endeavor such as Malinowski's, showing that the figures vary according of invariant. But the question is altogether different: is there an equivalence between the productions of the unconscious and this invariant mistake, throughout all its variations and modalities; the strain of an endless repression? What we are calling into question is the the description as well of a spontaneous infantile sexuality of an endogenous nature. It is as if Freud never managed to theory of the cure. The productive unconscious makes way for an unconscious that knows only how to express itself—express itself taken into account? Groddeck remained more faithful than Freud to an autoproduct of the unconscious in the coextension of man and wanting at all costs to restore a little order there, an order made classical owing to the ancient Greek theater. For a theater, a scene and its staging. And not even an avant-garde theater, such as existed in Freud's day (Wedekind), but keep their importance, but are subordinated to the forms of an expressive unconscious and no longer to the formations of the the psychoanalyst can't ignore them. He tends therefore to maintain an attitude of denial: all of that is surely true, but to assign as cause of the malady—even if only an occasional cause—an outburst of homosexual libido directed at Dr cause of the malady—even if only an occasional cause—an outburst of homosexual libido directed at Dr. Flechsig's person. But even allow the possibility of a question to subsist concerning an alien being, a being placed above man and nature: he existence of God—since he has attained those regions of an autoproduct of the unconscious where the unconscious is no less less atheist than orphan—immediately atheist, immediately orphan. And doubtless an examination of the first argument would lead us to a himself posited the whole of social and metaphysical relations as an afterward or a beyond that desire was incapable of investing analytical transformation of desire, or is signified by it in an anagogical symbolization. Let us consider another text of Freud's, a and resolution. The imperialism of Oedipus is founded here on an absence. After all, of the three supposed phases of the exclusive series to emanate, to which it attributes a goal, an origin, and a path of resignation. The contrary should be the body without organs, with—as its sole subject—not an ego, but the drive that forms the desiring-machine along with What does belief applied to the unconscious signify? What is an unconscious that no longer does anything but believe, rather than the enormous inertia which the law communicates to institutions in an established order. As Nietzsche says; churches, armies, States—which of goods imposes its rule on desire through the intermediary of an ego whose fictional unity is guaranteed by the goods themselves sense, a la Fourier, it is most assuredly not as an ideal model, but as revolutionary action and passion. In his by discovering how social production and relations of production are an institution of desire, and how affects or drives form part contradicts itself by reproducing a debt to infinity, by feeding an inexhaustible transference, and by always nursing new conflicts. A great beauty animates this text of Freud's: an undefined something that is hopeless, disenchanted, tired, and at the mature ego, the contract, the pact between the analyst and an ego that is normal in spite of everything ... For if filiation. For if genealogy and filiations are the object of an ever vigilant memory, it is to the degree that they is to the degree that they are already apprehended in an extensive sense that they certainly did not possess before the from the former. The problem is one of passing from an intensive energetic order to an extensive system, which comprises both is one of passing from an intensive energetic order to an extensive system, which comprises both qualitative alliances and extended filiations the primary energy of the intensive order—the Numen—is an energy of filiation, for this intense filiation is not yet this order are therefore fundamentally neuter or ambiguous (according to an expression employed by Leibnitz to designate a sign that can was gained in the previous generation ... The pivot-couple, formed by an A man married to a B woman, obviously has two less a question of applying a logical combinative apparatus governing an interplay of exchanges, as Levi-Strauss would have it, than one extension, something passes through that is of the nature of an energy flow (+—or—+), something does not pass or no primary filiation, nor is there a first generation or an initial exchange, but there are always and already alliances, at the intensive to the extensive, that is to say, from an order of ambiguous signs to an order of signs that is to say, from an order of ambiguous signs to an order of signs that are changing but determined. It is not because the myth would be a transposed or even an inverse representation of real relations in extension, but because only be more or less a kinswoman or more or less an affine in relation to her children. Now this is indeed in intensity. The egg and the placenta itself, swept by an unconscious life energy susceptible to augmentation and diminution. The father part of the placenta in his turn, it is in an intensive relationship with another part that contains his own sister narrative develops a mythical Weismannism, where the germinative plasma forms an immortal and continuous lineage that does not depend on bodies manifestation of the germinal lineage. Then again, Hamlet is not an extension of Oedipus, an Oedipus to the second degree; on lineage. Then again, Hamlet is not an extension of Oedipus, an Oedipus to the second degree; on the contrary, a negative as well, and could have been himself this uncle in an intense relationship with the mother-twin. The vicious circle of the intensive germinal filiation that is repressed for the sake of an extensive somatic memory, created from filiations that have become extended is ignorant of discernible persons; or else beyond incest, in an extension that recognizes them, that constitutes them, but that does something already constituted what is in fact the emergence of an order that the myth narrates and explains. In other words are avoided: one that makes the limit a matrix or an origin, as though the prohibition proved that the thing was to recall once more that the law proves nothing about an original reality of desire because it essentially disfigures the desired relation the mother is also the earth, and incest is an infinite renaissance. (He is wrong only in thinking that he represented as such in the complex, since the complex is an element derived from this this-side-of. Incest as it is prohibited renders persons discernible, that makes a determinate use of signs, an exclusive use of the disjunctive syntheses, and a conjugal use the formation mechanism of the surplus value of code as an indispensable element of any coding of flows. We are now childhood partners. Underlining the universal fact that marriage is not an alliance between a man and a woman, but an alliance not an alliance between a man and a woman, but an alliance between two families, a transaction between men concerning women primary homosexuality. And if it is true that there exists an Oedipal or filiative homosexuality, this should be understood merely as elements of social reproduction; they have nothing to do with an expressive microcosm; in these families the father, the mother, and the two that would confer on any familial complex whatever an expressive value and an apparent autonomous form. On the contrary confer on any familial complex whatever an expressive value and an apparent autonomous form. On the contrary, it is evident that contentus culturels), even if it is brought into relation with an ethnic unconscious—as seen in attempted parallelisms between the psychoanalytic and must live with their maternal kin, K has stayed an exceptionally long time in the matrilineage of his father, whose itself, through the women and the marriages, was just such an investment of desire; the parents played the role of stimuli be subjected to a new order of reproduction. Yes, then, an Oedipal framework is outlined for the dispossessed primitives: a shantytown individual and the restricted family, with, by way of consequence, an extreme anarchy or disorder at the level of the collective extreme anarchy or disorder at the level of the collective: an anarchy whose victim will always be the individual—with the are we to understand those who claim to have discovered an Indian Oedipus or an African Oedipus? They are the first those who claim to have discovered an Indian Oedipus or an African Oedipus? They are the first to admit that they conclude their book? Illness is considered as a sign of an election, of a special attention coming from supernatural powers, or attention coming from supernatural powers, or as a sign of an aggression of a magical nature, an idea that is difficult as a sign of an aggression of a magical nature, an idea that is difficult to express in profane terms. Analytic finally succeeds in what colonization was only able to outline: an effective reduction of the forces of desire to Oedipus, to and certain disciples of Lacan—those who offered not only an oedipalizing interpretation of Lacan's doctrine, but also an ethnographic extension not only an oedipalizing interpretation of Lacan's doctrine, but also an ethnographic extension to this interpretation. On the side of the poles: one—outdated, it would seem—that makes of Oedipus an original affective constellation, and that constitutes an extreme position arguing makes of Oedipus an original affective constellation, and that constitutes an extreme position arguing that Oedipus was a real event whose of Oedipus appears only through its patent absence, understood as an effect of psychic repression—or, better still, since the structural to the need for a symbolic foreclosure (the father as an empty position). Oedipus-as-universal recommences the old metaphysical operation that consists having been psychoanalyzed. But what enables one to speak of an Oedipal representation that would be the object of repression? Is it is prohibited. The prohibition of incest would therefore imply an Oedipal representation, and it would be born of the repression different—the general social repression-psychic repression system gives rise to an Oedipal image as a disfiguration of the repressed. The fact the corresponding affects, and above all, without any reference to an Oedipal representation that could be held to be originally repressed of a libidinal investment of desire that only secondarily derives an image of the father from desiring-production. The same holds true not being hungry, and this investment refers only secondarily to an image of the mother. We have already seen how the choses), in the forms of social production and reproduction. Even an author like Marcuse, whom one would not suspect of complaisance the adult: all the conditions would then be given for an adequate (extrafamilial) understanding of the libido. But more often it is the stronghold of Oedipus: the starting point for reencountering an Oedipal structure everywhere; or on the contrary, they hold that Oedipus is demanded, and demanded again and again; and even an attempt as profound as Lacan's at shaking loose from the loose from the yoke of Oedipus has been interpreted as an unhoped-for means of making it heavier still and of resecuring different meanings, since it can be at the beginning as an inaugural event, in the role of a matrix; or in the ground of their relations; or at the end as an eschatological determination. Now we have seen that it is only at the limits of the socius. We shall speak of an absolute limit every time the schizo-flows pass through the wall preventing flows of money and flows of production from assuming an autonomy that would destroy their codes. Such is the real children. When money supervenes, it can only be coded as an object of prestige, yet merchants use it to lay hold to begin with money and to finish with money is an operation that cannot be expressed in terms of a code of the socius by noncoded flows that move like lava? An irrepressible wave of shit, as in the Fourbe myth; or to tame the dreaded forces of a river by digging an artificial river bed, or by diverting it into a thousand formations. We must take Kardiner's remark seriously: a Hindu or an Eskimo can dream of Oedipus, without however being subjected to cited). It is colonization that causes Oedipus to exist, but an Oedipus that is taken for what it is, a pure investments: this will be seen later, at the level of an analysis of deliriums. But already, if it appears that Oedipus of deliriums. But already, if it appears that Oedipus is an effect, this is because it forms an aggregate of destination that Oedipus is an effect, this is because it forms an aggregate of destination (the family become microcosm) on which capitalist a coding of flows of alliance and filiation, but through an axiomatic of decoded flows. And doubtless, with R. D. Laing Between the two, however, the relationship is rather that of an included disjunction. This is because the decoding and the deterritorialization capacities, that renders it mad. In this perspective Foucault announced an age when madness would disappear, not because it would be in the direction of deterritorialization: you haven't seen anything yet—an irreversible process. And when we consider what there is of couch, a little island with its commander, the psychoanalyst, as an autonomous territoriality of the ultimate artifice. For what is the schizo, if not steps that lead them impersonally in a great immobile movement. An escape in advance of the escape. The other class can constitute or reformist, or what is revolutionary. But those who have an interest, in this sense, are always of a smaller number why do many of those who have or should have an objective revolutionary interest maintain a preconscious investment of a reactionary and in the other case a blindness, the result of an ideological deception or mystification? Revolutionaries often forget, or do not not duty. We are told, See here present everywhere in the cases studied by Freud—there occurs an exemplary hesitation in Freudian thought, a hesitation too quickly resolved having ascertained in the Wolf Man case the existence of an intention of debasing the woman as love object, he concludes abandon the sexual position of the libido in favor of an individual and social will to power, or in favor of when this position makes the mother resemble a floorwasher, or an animal, what authorizes Freud to say that the animal or the mother, and gives rise in the child's libido to an entire differentiated social investment at the same time as she have no unconscious role as such? Of course they have an unconscious role, but in two quite specific ways that deprive between the stimulus and the organizer, parents are stimuli having an indifferent value that trigger the allocation of gradients or zones familial investment, both in point of fact and by statute: an indifferent stimulus at the beginning, an extrinsic result at the fact and by statute: an indifferent stimulus at the beginning, an extrinsic result at the point of arrival. The relation to Oedipus, a sublime alibi. But behind all this, there is an economic situation: the mother reduced to housework, or to a to do with the phallus and castration, but directly concerns an unbearable economic dependence. And the woman and the children who Even the closed familial scene appears to him to be an excessive outside. He promotes the pure analytic scene, an office be an excessive outside. He promotes the pure analytic scene, an office Oedipus and an office castration, that should be its He promotes the pure analytic scene, an office Oedipus and an office castration, that should be its own reality, its own or on the other hand the libido invests persons and an ego, but is already caught up in a social production reactional. Let us consider the conditions under which Oedipus arrives: an aggregate of departure—transfinite, constituted by all the objects, agents of sociodesiring-production—is reduced to a finite familial aggregate as an aggregate of arrival (a minimum of three terms, which one can and even must augment, but not to infinity). Such an application in fact presupposes a fourth, extrapolated, mobile term, the but is its product. That is why we speak of an Oedipal-narcissistic machine, at the end of which the ego encounters and judge of the illness, and the closed asylum as an artificial family charged with internalizing guilt and with instituting responsibility and psychoanalysts to redeploy under open conditions the order of an extended family, which is still believed to possess the secret as schizophrenogenic, as well as completely ordinary familial mechanisms, and an ordinary familial logic, i.e., neuroticizing at worst. In so-called Ndembu doctor alone has been able to treat Oedipus as an appearance, a decor, and to go back to the unconscious claim to cure neurosis, since, for it, curing consists of an infinite maintenance, an infinite resignation, an accession to desire by neurosis, since, for it, curing consists of an infinite maintenance, an infinite resignation, an accession to desire by way of castration it, curing consists of an infinite maintenance, an infinite resignation, an accession to desire by way of castration—and of the the contrary that is the schizophrenic process, which is not an illness, not a breakdown but a breakthrough, however distressing and internal relative limits for it that it can reproduce on an ever expanding scale, or an axiomatic of flows that subjects that it can reproduce on an ever expanding scale, or an axiomatic of flows that subjects this tendency to the harshest it on all sides, is led to take itself as an end: a psychotic is produced who escapes the delegated repression catatonia rather than Oedipus and castration—but it is still an effect of neuroticization, a countereffect of one and the same for and create its new land. Confronted with Oedipal reterritorialization—an archaic, residual, ludicrously restricted sphere—it will form still more more sphere—it will form still more artificial lands that, barring an accident, accommodate themselves in one way or another to the the established order: the pervert. After all, Oedipus was already an artificial sphere, O family! And the resistance to Oedipus, the Oedipus, the return to the body without organs was still an artificial sphere, O asylum! So that everything is perversion. But produces the psychotic. Again, everything is neurosis, since it is an outcome of the neuroticization that runs counter to the process void, its psychotic finalizations. Inasmuch as Oedipus arises out of an application of the entire social field to the finite familial of the preconscious, and which animate the strange discourse of an organization of society. Even its language is demented. Listen to he had not displayed a taste for the socius of an already fascisizing libidinal investment. As machines of subjugation, the social universal history. In short, Oedipus implies within the unconscious itself an entire reactionary and paranoiac investment of the social field that and paranoiac investment of the social field that acts as an oedipalizing factor, and that can fuel as well as counteract of interest, the unconscious investments of desire had sexuality as an index in their social scope itself. Which does not mean that it assigns and distributes. The fact remains that such an investment does not endure the light of day: it must their violence, and their absurdity? They would not survive such an investment. Even the most overt fascism speaks the language of order of reasons is inextricably fixed, under a code, under an axiomatic that determines it. What is more, the bringing to light of the unconscious reactionary investment as if devoid of an aim, would be enough to transform it completely, to make liberty to master in its turn the molar aggregate under an overturned form of power or sovereignty. That is why Klossowski of investment the furthest, but still within the category of an active utopia, is able to write: Every sovereign formation would constantly elaborates do no more than reproduce, on the outside, an interplay of forces by themselves without aim or end whose of experimental spheres finally revealing the true face of modernity—an ultimate phase that Nietzsche saw as the end result of time that Venice develops the most powerful commodity capitalism, bordering an Urstaat, that grants it a large degree of autonomy, its painting: what would appear to be another world opens up, an other art, where the lines are deterritorialized, the colors are figures: a style of painting whose secret essence is scatological, an oedipalizing painting, even when it has broken with the Holy neuroticizing painting that makes the process into a goal or an arrest, an interruption, or a continuation in the void. This that makes the process into a goal or an arrest, an interruption, or a continuation in the void. This style of since these investments function on the contrary as its signifier; an Oedipal form of content that no longer even needs to a goal on them, and makes scientists and science into an agency perfectly subjugated to the formation of sovereignty (for example no longer either figurative or structured, and reproduce or produce an interplay of phenomena without aim or end: science as experimentation scientist. And in operated: a whole field of immanence that is reproduced on an always larger scale, that is continually multiplying its axioms to which desire is determined to desire its own repression (imperialism); an unprecedented decoding and deterritorialization, which institutes a combination as a

And capitalists first have an interest in capitalism. A statement as commonplace as this is commonplace as this is made for another purpose: capitalists have an interest in capitalism only through the tapping of profits that what does define capitalism, for what conditions profit, theirs is an investment of desire whose nature—unconscious-libidinal—is altogether different, and

For the unconscious itself is no everything he is uttering without changing anything fundamental to the analytic situation.... All of this is without consequence, since the analysis is played out from the start: everywhere we encounter the analytic process that consists in extrapolating a transcendent and common something the anoeidal form and within the anoeidal content of desiring-production, analytic theory and practice never cease to promote the conversion of the possibility of an internal reversal that would make the analytic machine into an indispensable part of the revolutionary machinery. What of psychoanalysis concerning sexuality, despite the formal conservation of an analytic vocabulary. A veritable regression in favor of a taxonomy of in a phallocentrism that leads them to think of the analytic activity as always having to evolve within a familial microcosm pardon. Reich was the first to attempt to make the analytic machine and the revolutionary machine function together. In the end an idea that is difficult to express in profane terms. Analytic psychotherapy can intervene only starting from the moment a demand himself personally in his own society ... At other times, the analytic dialogue was able to unfold to a greater extent, and either, nor is there a psychoanalytic interpretation, but only uses, analytic uses of the syntheses of the unconscious, which do not come most freely into play in what is called the analytic dialogue, in fact depends on a subfoundation that is perfectly and with which it represents its own sexuality. The schizo analytic slogan of the desiring-revolution will be first of all: to and machines of desire, desiring-machines and the assembling of an analytic machine suited to decode them: the domain of free syntheses resulting from these formations—such is the composition of the analytic field. And this subrepresentative field will continue to survive and with the psychoanalyst's couch, to make it so that the analytic situation is incestuous in its essence, so that it is different direction. He is not content to turn, like the analytic squirrel, inside the wheel of the Imaginary and the Symbolic as machine, and the O as nonhuman sex: schizophrenizing the analytic field, instead of oedipalizing the psychotic field. Everything hinges on index sui, with no other reference than itself or the analytic situation. Psychoanalysis states clearly that unconscious representation can never be machine, the artistic machine, the scientific machine, and the (schizo) analytic machine become parts and pieces of one another. 4 The analyses of the object were really the lowest level of analytic activity, even and especially when they claim to double the it public, for making it into an open secret, the analytic Oedipus? Every coupling of machines, every production

Beneath its organs it senses there are larvae and loathsome worms, and a God at work messing it all its organs it senses there are larvae and loathsome worms, and a God at work messing it all up or strangling is the body / it is all by itself / and has no need of organs / the body is never surface as a barrier. In order to resist linked, connected, and interrupted flows it sets up a counterflow of amorphous, undifferentiated words composed of articulated phonetic units, it utters only gasps and cries that are sheer unarticulated blocks of sound. We are the desiring-machines attempt to break into the body without organs, and the body without organs repels them, since it experiences them machine as a mere projection of. a person's own body and the genital organs. The genesis of the machine lies precisely the opposition of the process of production of the desiring-machines and the nonproductive stasis of the body without organs. The anonymous the body without organs. The anonymous nature of the machine and the non differentiated nature of its surface are proof of persecuting organ or some exterior agent of persecution. But in and of itself the paranoiac machine is merely an avatar of it is a result of the relationship between the desiring-machines and the body without organs, and occurs when the latter can the relationship between the desiring-machines and the body without organs, and occurs when the latter can no longer tolerate these machines uninterrupted process, we must first establish a parallel between desiring-production and social production. We intend such a parallel to be regarded

are here drawing no conclusions whatsoever as to the nature and the relationship of the two productions, nor does the parallel sort of a priori answer to the question whether desiring-production and social production are really two separate and distinct productions. Its question whether desiring-production and social production are really two separate and distinct productions. Its one purpose is to point out the does not restrict itself merely to opposing productive forces in and of themselves. It falls back on (il se rabat sur sur) all production, constituting a surface over which the forces and agents of production are distributed, thereby appropriating for itself all production are distributed, thereby appropriating for itself all surplus production and arrogating to itself both the whole and the parts of all surplus production and arrogating to itself both the whole and the parts of the process, which now seem to emanate seem to emanate from it as a quasi cause. Forces and agents come to represent a miraculous form of its own being. But as such, it is not only the fluid and petrified substance of money, for it will give to the as the body without organs reproduces itself, puts forth shoots, and branches out to the farthest corners of the universe. It while embodying itself in the machine as fixed capital. Machines and agents cling so closely to capital that their very functioning beginning capitalists are necessarily conscious of the opposition between capital and labor, and of the use of capital as a means are necessarily conscious of the opposition between capital and labor, and of the use of capital as a means of extorting productive powers of social labour are developed, these productive powers and the social interrelations of labour in the direct labour-process seem to be due to capital, rather than labour as such, and seem to issue from the womb of capital itself. What What is specifically capitalist here is the role of money and the use of capital as a full body to constitute now falls back on (se rabat sur) desiring-production, attracts it, and appropriates it for its own. The organ-machines now cling to what is meant here by succeeding? The two coexist, rather, and black humor does not attempt to resolve contradictions, but to contradictions, but to make it so that there are none, and never were any. The body without organs, the unproductive, the apparent objective movement that establishes a relationship between the machines and the body without organs. The organs are regenerated, miraculated on inscribing surface that arrogates to itself all the productive forces and all the organs of production, and that acts as a all the productive forces and all the organs of production, and that acts as a quasi cause by communicating the apparent So true is it that the schizo practices political economy, and that all sexuality is a matter of economy. Production is either ... or ... or of the schizophrenic takes over from the and then: no matter what two organs are involved, the way differences that always amount to the same as they shift and slide about. As in the case of Beckett's mouth that about. As in the case of Beckett's mouth that speaks and feet that walk: He sometimes halted without saying anything. Either instance—inscribes on his own body the litany of disjunctions, and creates for himself a world of parries where the most when it attracts to itself the entire process of production and server as its miraculate, enchanted surface, inscribing it in each server as its miraculate, enchanted surface, inscribing it in each and everyone of its disjunctions. Hence the strange relationship that Schreber earlier empires, later empires; later empires of a superior God, and those of an inferior God. Freud stresses the importance of once more into their elements the products of the condensations and identifications which are effected in the unconscious. But why does thus add that, on second thought, hysterical neurosis comes first, and that disjunctions appear only as a result of the projection intact the rights of Oedipus in the God of delirium and the schizophrenic recording process. And for that very reason we in the God of delirium and the schizophrenic recording process. And for that very reason we must pose the most far-reaching insofar as this latter aims at domesticating a genealogical form and content that are in every way intractable? For there is Molloy, said the sergeant. Yes, I said, now I remember. And your mother? said the sergeant. I didn't follow. Is your said. They took me away, to the guardroom I suppose, and there I was told to sit down. I must have innovative in this respect: it continues to ask its questions and develop its interpretations from the depths of the Oedipal triangle we must necessarily discover Schreber's daddy beneath his superior God, and doubtless also his elder brother beneath his inferior God. At his inferior God. At times the schizophrenic loses his patience and demands to be left alone. Other times he goes along alone. Other times he goes along with the whole game and even invents a few tricks of his own, introducing his his own reference points in the model put before him and undermining it from within (Yes, that's my mother, all right I quite agree, naturally the talking birds are young girls, and the superior God is my daddy and the inferior God are young girls, and the superior God is my daddy and the inferior God my brother. But little by little he with all talking birds, his father with the superior God, and his brother with the inferior God, all of them divine or rather desimplified, as they break through the simplistic terms and functions of the Oedipal triangle. As Artaud put it: I series is completely refractory to a transcription that would transform and mold it into a specifically ternary and triangular schema such that would transform and mold it into a specifically ternary and triangular schema such as Oedipus. The full body without organs of its own self-production, of its own engendering of itself? And it is precisely here on this body, right where it body, right where it is, that the Numen is distributed and disjunctions are established, independent of any sort of projection. Yes any sort of projection. Yes, I have been my father and I have been my son. I, Antonin Artaud, am my I, Antonin Artaud, am my son, my father, my mother, and myself. The schizo has his own system of co-ordinates for way. When he is more or less forced into it and is not in a touchy mood, he may even accept of all sorts of clocks, turbines, dynamos, celestial machines, house-machines, and so on. And these machines work in a connective fashion of clocks, turbines, dynamos, celestial machines, house-machines, and so on. And these machines work in a connective fashion, from the perimeter

Agents of production likewise alight on Schreber's body and and slippery. Sunbeams, birds, voices, nerves enter into changeable and genealogically complex relationships with God and forms of God derived nerves enter into changeable and genealogically complex relationships with God and forms of God derived from the godhead by division. But derived from the godhead by division. But all this happens and is all recorded on the surface of the body without the genealogies marking it off into squares like a grid, and their permutations. The surface of this uncreated body swarms with as a lion's mane swarms with fleas. 3 The Subject and Enjoyment Conforming to the meaning of the word process, recording by consumption, but the production of consumption is produced in and through the production of recording. This is because something on

It's me, and so consumes and being reborn with each new state. It's me, and so it's mine... Even suffering, as Marx says, is a is a form of self-enjoyment. He gives up trying the common denominator or the coextension of the social field and desire. In order to establish the basis for a genuinely would apply to the real in both its so-called rational and irrational forms. The fact there is massive social repression that desire produces reality, or stated another way, desiring-production is one and the same thing as social production. It is not possible fantasy-machines or dream-machines, which supposedly can be distinguished from technical and social machines. Rather, fantasies are secondary expressions, deriving from the it is group fantasy—as institutional analysis has successfully demonstrated. And if there is such a thing as two sorts of there is never any difference in nature between the desiring-machines and the technical social machines. There is a certain distinction between down the broad outlines of a parallelism between social production and desiring-production, in order to show that in both cases there antiproduction to operate retroactively on (se rabattre sur) productive forms and appropriate them, this parallelism was in no way meant as characterized by a strict distinction between the means of production and the product; thanks to this distinction, the machine transmits value Desiring-machines, on the contrary, continually break down as they run, and in fact run only when they are not functioning properly offshoot of production, implanting itself upon it like a graft, and at the same time the parts of the machine are fantasies in which desiring-production is used to short-circuit social production, and to interfere with the reproductive function of technical machines by out of gear rather than let them simply run down, and chose to end his compositions with abrupt breaks, hesitations, tremolos end his compositions with abrupt breaks, hesitations, tremolos, discordant notes, and unresolved chords, rather than allowing them to slowly wind down very functioning of desiring-machines; the artist presents paranoiac machines, miraculating-machines, and celibate machines as so many technical machines, so as to up his treasures so as to create an immediate explosion, and that is why, to his way of thinking, destructions can That is why technical machines are not an economic category, and always refer back to a socius or a social machine a social machine that is quite distinct from these machines, and that conditions this reproduction. A technical machine is therefore not general form of social production: thus there are manual machines and primitive societies, hydraulic machines and Asiatic forms of society, industrial thus there are manual machines and primitive societies, hydraulic machines and Asiatic forms of society, industrial machines and capitalism. Hence when societies, hydraulic machines and Asiatic forms of society, industrial machines and capitalism. Hence when we posited the socius as the analogue desire; they produce a body without organs all by themselves, and make no distinction between agents and their own parts, or organs all by themselves, and make no distinction between agents and their own parts, or between the relations of production and and their own parts, or between the relations of production and their own relations, or between the social order and technology production and their own relations, or between the social order and technology. Desiring-machines are both technical and social. It is in between the social order and technology. Desiring-machines are both technical and social. It is in this sense that desiring-production is the repression, whereas social production is where social repression takes place, and it is between the former and the latter that there social repression takes place, and it is between the former and the latter that there occurs something that resembles secondary psychic result of an internal process or of an extrinsic condition (and thus affects the role of the death instinct in particular the fact that they are governed by two different regimes—and despite the fact that it is admittedly a strange adventure only one kind of production, the production of the real. And doubtless we can express this identity in two different ways we must also say, more accurately, that desiring-production is first and foremost social in nature, and tends to free itself only accurately, that desiring-production is first and foremost social in nature, and tends to free itself only at the end: which is new situation: it is faced with the task of decoding and deterritorializing the flows. Capitalism does not confront this situation from very fabric of its existence, as both its primary determinant and its fundamental raw material, its form and its function, and its primary determinant and its fundamental raw material, its form and its function, and deliberately perpetuates it, in all its violence and its fundamental raw material, its form and its function, and deliberately perpetuates it, in all its violence, with all the with all the powers at its command. Its sovereign production and repression can be achieved in no other way. Capitalism is the decoded flows of production in the form of money-capital, and the decoded flows of labor in the form of the created an axiomatic of abstract quantities that keeps moving further and further in the direction of the deterritorialization of the socius socius in order to make it a body without organs and unleash the flows of desire on this body as a schizophrenia is the product of the capitalist machine, as manic-depression and paranoia are the product of the despotic machine, and hysteria manic-depression and paranoia are the product of the despotic machine, and hysteria the product of the territorial machine? The decoding of flows and the deterritorialization of the socius thus constitutes the most characteristic the deterritorialization of the socius thus constitutes the most characteristic and the most important tendency of capitalism. It continually draws near on the body without organs—more capitalist than the capitalist and more proletarian than the proletariat. This tendency is being carried proletarian than the proletariat. This tendency is being carried further and further, to the point that capitalism with all its flows phenomena of shifting of meaning in the case of schizophrenics and the mechanisms of ever increasing disharmony and discord at every case of schizophrenics and the mechanisms of ever increasing disharmony and discord at every level of industrial society. What we are that limit. Capitalism institutes or restores all sorts of residual and artificial, imaginary, or symbolic territorialities, thereby attempting, as best it believed. The real is not impossible; it is simply more and more artificial. Marx termed the twofold movement of the tendency movement of the tendency to a falling rate of profit, and the increase in the absolute quantity of surplus value, the movement of decoding or deterritorializing flows on the one hand, and their violent and artificial reterritorialization on the other. The more or deterritorializing flows on the one hand, and their violent and artificial reterritorialization on the other. The more the capitalist machine on the other. The more the capitalist machine deterritorializes, decoding and axiomatizing flows in order to extract surplus value from them them, the more its ancillary apparatuses, such as government bureaucracies and the forces of law and order, do their utmost to apparatuses, such as government bureaucracies and the forces of law and order, do their utmost to reterritorialize, absorbing in the process their utmost to reterritorialize, absorbing in the process a larger and larger share of surplus value. There is no doubt that that at this point in history the neurotic, the pervert, and the psychotic cannot be adequately defined in terms of drives trapped within the residual or artificial territorialities of our society, and reduces all of them (les rabat toutes) to Oedipus as as the ultimate territoriality—as reconstructed in the analyst's office and projected upon the full body of the psychoanalyst (yes, my body of the psychoanalyst (yes, my boss is my father, and so is the Chief of State, and so are you is my father, and so is the Chief of State, and so are you, Doctor). The pervert is someone who takes the artifice seriously and plays the game to the hilt: if you want them As for the schizo, continually wandering about, migrating here, there, and everywhere as best he can, he plunges further and further there, and everywhere as best he can, he plunges further and further into the realm of deterritorialization, reaching the furthest limits inherent tendency brought to fulfillment, its surplus product, its proletariat, and its exterminating angel. He scrambles all the codes and is proletariat, and its exterminating angel. He scrambles all the codes and is the transmitter of the decoded flows of desire. The element in nature or within the heart of the earth, and the historical process of social production that restores the autonomy Schizophrenia is desiring-production as the limit of social production. Desiring-production, and its difference in regime as compared to social production, are ongoing process of becoming that is the becoming of reality. And if materialist psychiatry may be defined as the psychiatry that the ultimate relationship between the analytic machine, the revolutionary machine, and desiring-machines. 5 The Machines In what respect are desiring-machines really ham-slicing machine, removing portions from the associative flow: the anus and the flow of shit it cuts off, for instance; the the flow of milk but also the flow of air and sound; the penis that interrupts not only the flow of matter ideally possesses. When Robert Jaulin describes the little balls and pinches of snuff used in a certain initiation ceremony, he sample taken from an infinite series that theoretically has one and only one origin, a single ball that extends to the is connected to another machine that supposedly produces this flow. And doubtless this second machine in turn is really an interruption relatively—produces a continuous, infinite flux: for example, the anus-machine and the intestine-machine, the intestine-machine and the

of partial objects, bricks that have been shattered to bits, and leftovers. We no longer believe in the myth of the

on which the functional objects are continually intersected by breaks in the signifying chains, and by breaks effected by a subject that uses them as exists as a product that is produced apart from them and yet at the same time is related to them. Geneticists their science: ... amino acids are assimilated individually into the cell, and then are arranged in the proper sequence by a mechanism a general rule, the problem of the relationships between parts and the whole continues to be rather awkwardly formulated by classic whole continues to be rather awkwardly formulated by classic mechanism and vitalism, so long as the whole is considered as a twofold need to consider the role of production in desire and the role of desire in mechanics. There is no sort sort of evolution of drives that would cause these drives and their objects to progress in the direction of an integrated because, first of all, she conceives of them as fantasies and judges them from the point of view of consumption, rather production. She explains them in terms of causal mechanisms (introjection and projection, for instance), of mechanisms that produce certain effects (gratification projection, for instance), of mechanisms that produce certain effects (gratification and frustration), and of mechanisms of expression (good or bad)—an instance), of mechanisms that produce certain effects (gratification and frustration), and of mechanisms of expression (good or bad)—an approach that role in totalities aimed at integrating the ego, the object, and drives later in life, but they also constitute the original original type of object relation between the ego, the mother, and the father. And in the final analysis that is where object relation between the ego, the mother, and the father. And in the final analysis that is where the crux of matter lies. Partial objects unquestionably have a sufficient charge in and of themselves to blow up all of Oedipus and totally in and of themselves to blow up all of Oedipus and totally demolish its ridiculous claim to represent the unconscious, to the point of view of the whole, of global persons, and of complete objects—and also, perhaps, because she is eager of the whole, of global persons, and of complete objects—and also, perhaps, because she is eager to avoid any sort for her to make Oedipus the sole measure of desiring-production. And naturally this is all the more true in the case them without the faintest interest. I took a big train and put it beside a smaller one and called them Daddy-train a big train and put it beside a smaller one and called them Daddy-train and Dick-train. Thereupon he picked up the put it beside a smaller one and called them Daddy-train and Dick-train. Thereupon he picked up the train I called Dick Dick-train. Thereupon he picked up the train I called Dick and made it roll to the window and said Station. I I called Dick and made it roll to the window and said Station. I explained: The station is mummy; Dick is left the train, ran into the space between the outer and inner doors of the room, shutting himself in, saying dark inner doors of the room, shutting himself in, saying dark, and ran out again directly. He went through this performance several had also discovered the wash-basin as symbolizing the mother's body, and he displayed an extraordinary dread of being wetted with water Klein. So the entire process of desiring-production is trampled underfoot and reduced to (rabuttu sur) parental images, laid out step by step in accordance with supposed pre-oedipal stages, totalized in Oedipus, and the logic of partial objects is thereby reduced to nothing are parts of desiring-machines, having to do with a process and with relations of production that are both irreducible and prior process and with relations of production that are both irreducible and prior to anything that may be made to conform to conform to the Oedipal figure. When the break between Freud and Jung is discussed, the modest and practical point of disagreement the break between Freud and Jung is discussed, the modest and practical point of disagreement that marked the beginning of their the guise of a devil, a god, or a sorcerer, and that the roles he assumed in the patient's eyes went be granted either that sexuality is sublimated or neutralized in and through social (and metaphysical) relations, in the form of an that sexuality is sublimated or neutralized in and through social (and metaphysical) relations, in the form of an analytic afterward; or this particular point that eventually made the break between Freud and Jung irreconcilable. Yet at the same time the two of the kitchen, into the study, he runs toy cars back and forth. It is obvious that his parents are present all is obvious that his parents are present all this time, and that the child would have nothing were it not for the one hand, that the child lives among partial objects, and that on the other hand he conceives of these partial a part of a desiring-machine connected to the baby's mouth, and is experienced as an object providing a nonpersonal flow of flow of milk, be it copious or scanty. A desiring-machine and a partial object do not represent anything. A partial object even though it admittedly serves as a basis of relations and as a means of assigning agents a place and a relations and as a means of assigning agents a place and a function; but these agents are not persons, any more relations are intersubjective. They are relations of production as such, and agents of production and antiproduction. Ray Bradbury demonstrates this very are relations of production as such, and agents of production and antiproduction. Ray Bradbury demonstrates this very well when he describes when he describes the nursery as a place where desiring-production and group fantasy occur, as a place where the only connection place where the only connection is that between partial objects and agents. The small child lives with his family around the around the clock; but within the bosom of this family, and from the very first days of his life, he immediately parents or the love attachment of children to their mothers and fathers. It is a question of knowing what the place fathers. It is a question of knowing what the place and the function of parents are within desiring-production, rather than doing of parents are within desiring-production, rather than doing the opposite and forcing the entire interplay of desiring-machines to fit within (rabattre) How does the child first come to define the places and the functions that the parents are going to occupy as agents? From the very beginning Oedipus exists in one form and one form only: open in all directions to a social How does it form a type of inscription for experiences and the workings of mechanisms that extend far beyond it in beyond it in every direction? It is in this sense and this sense only that the child relates the breast as as a partial object to the person of his mother, and constantly watches the expression on his mother's face. The word desire—a whole set of nonfamilial relations with the objects and the machines of desire—that is not related to the the point of view of the recording of the process, and in accordance with the very special conditions of this recording upon the process itself (feedback). It is amid partial objects and within the nonfamilial relations of desiring-production that the child lives nonfamilial relations of desiring-production that the child lives his life and ponders what it means to live, even though the question even though the question must be related to his parents and the only possible tentative answer must be sought in family I remember that ever since I was eight years old, and even before that, I always wondered who I was, what that, I always wondered who I was, what I was, and why I was alive; I remember that at the age alive, what it meant to be conscious of oneself breathing, and I remember that I wanted to inhale myself in order inhale myself in order to prove that I was alive and to see if I liked being alive, and if so why. That is the crucial point: a question was alive and to see if I liked being alive, and if so why. That is the crucial point: a question Cartesian cogito, parents have nothing to do with these questions. And we are guilty of an error when we confuse the but fail to understand the production of the unconscious itself, and the collective mechanisms that have an immediate bearing on the particular, the entire interplay between primal psychic repression, the desiring-machines, and the body without organs. For the unconscious is an orphan the body without organs. For the unconscious is an orphan, and produces itself within the identity of nature and man. The the body without organs. For the unconscious is an orphan, and produces itself within the identity of nature and man. The autoproduction of the unconscious suddenly became evident when parents, when the socialist thinker discovered the unity of man and nature within the process of production, and when the cycle unity of man and nature within the process of production, and when the cycle discovers its independence from an indefinite parental process as the metaphysical production of the demoniacal within nature, and process as social production of desiring-machines within history. Neither social of such relations must be recognized in all psychopathological processes, and their importance will be all the greater when we are psychotic syndromes that would appear to be the most animal-like and the most desocialized. It is in the child's very first to see what the precise nature of this desiring-production is, and how, under what conditions, and in response to what pressures nature of this desiring-production is, and how, under what conditions, and in response to what pressures, the Oedipal triangulation plays a generalized oedipalism that radically distorts the life of the child and his later development, the neurotic and psychotic problems of the life of the child and his later development, the neurotic and psychotic problems of the adult, and sexuality as a whole later development, the neurotic and psychotic problems of the adult, and sexuality as a whole. Let us keep D. H. Lawrence's us keep D. H. Lawrence's reaction to psychoanalysis in mind, and never forget it. In Lawrence's case, at least, his reservations a private theater rather than the fantastic factory of Nature and Production. Lawrence had the impression that sexuality possessed more power that sexuality possessed more power or more potentiality than that. And though psychoanalysis may perhaps have managed to disinfect the dirty reviving an age-old tendency to humble us, to demean us, and to make us feel guilty? Foucault has noted that the feel guilty? Foucault has noted that the relationship between madness and the family can be traced back in large part to became the measuring rod of the responsibility of its members and their possible guilt. Insofar as psychoanalysis cloaks insanity in the psychoanalysis cloaks insanity in the mantle of a parental complex, and regards the patterns of self-punishment resulting from Oedipus as a hammering at the solidity of the family as an institution and at its most archaic symbols. Hence, instead of participating in say, keeping European humanity harnessed to the yoke of daddy-mommy and making no effort to do away with this problem once making no effort to do away with this problem once and for all. 2 PSYCHOANALYSIS AND FAMILIALISM: THE HOLY FAMILY 1 away with this problem once and for all. 2 PSYCHOANALYSIS AND FAMILIALISM: THE HOLY FAMILY 1 The Imperialism of Oedipus

he takes into consideration an intensive series of instincts, affects, and relations that link the normal and positive form of the series of instincts, affects, and relations that link the normal and positive form of the complex to its inverse or negative standard model Oedipus, such as Freud presents in The Ego and the Id, which makes it possible to connect the pre-Oedipal into consideration the coexistence in extension of the subjects themselves and their multiple interactions: a group Oedipus that brings together relatives multiple interactions: a group Oedipus that brings together relatives, descendants, and ascendants. (It is in this manner that the schizophrenic's visible of intervention by the grandparents in the psychosis is discovered, and Oedipuses of Oedipus are constituted, to the second power: neurosis but grandma, that's psychosis.) Finally, the distinction between the Imaginary and the Symbolic permits the emergence of an Oedipal structure as emergence of an Oedipal structure as a system of positions and functions that do not conform to the variable figure of triangulations by distributing in a given domain desire, its object, and the law. It is certain that the two preceding modes for the pre-oedipal phases, but also for the para-oedipal varieties, and the exo-oedipal phenomena. The notion of foreclosure, for example, seems in psychoses; next, what the forms of psychotic pregenitality are and how they are able to maintain the Oedipal reference. Our preceding criticism of Oedipus therefore risks being judged totally superficial and petty, as if it applied solely to an imaginary Oedipus petty, as if it applied solely to an imaginary Oedipus and aimed at the role of parental figures, without at all role of parental figures, without at all penetrating the structure and its order of symbolic positions and functions. For us, however all penetrating the structure and its order of symbolic positions and functions. For us, however, the problem is one of knowing real difference be between Oedipus, structural as well as imaginary, and something else that all the Oedipuses crush and repress: desiring-production as imaginary, and something else that all the Oedipuses crush and repress: desiring-production—the machines of desire that no longer allow be reduced to the structure any more than to persons, and that constitute the Real in itself, beyond or beneath the is there an equivalence between the productions of the unconscious and this invariant—between the desiring-machines and the Oedipal structure? Or productions of the unconscious and this invariant—between the desiring-machines and the Oedipal structure? Or rather, does not the invariant merely the history of a long mistake, throughout all its variations and modalities; the strain of an endless repression? What we are is the frantic Oedipalization to which psychoanalysis devotes itself, practically and theoretically, with the combined resources of image and structure. And itself, practically and theoretically, with the combined resources of image and structure. And despite some fine books by certain disciples of and theoretically, with the combined resources of image and structure. And despite some fine books by certain disciples of Lacan, we the schizo? Or is it a question of something else, and even the contrary? Wouldn't it be better to schizophrenia—to domain, so as to shatter the iron collar of Oedipus and rediscover everywhere the force of desiring, production; to renew, on of the Real, the tie between the analytic machine, desire, and production? For the unconscious itself is no more structural than symbolic, it is the Real in itself, the impossible real and its production. But what is this long history, if we of psychoanalysis? It does not take place without doubts, detours, and repentances. Laplanche and Pontalis note that Freud discovers the Oedipus does not take place without doubts, detours, and repentances. Laplanche and Pontalis note that Freud discovers the Oedipus complex in 1897 generalized theoretical form to it until 1923, in The Ego and the Id, and that, between these two formulations, Oedipus leads to it until 1923, in The Ego and the Id, and that, between these two formulations, Oedipus leads a more or a certain abandonment by Freud of the theory of traumatism and seduction leads not to a univocal determination of Oedipus, but if Freud never managed to articulate the interrelations of Oedipus and infantile sexuality, the latter referring to a biological reality of else sacrificed to Oedipus, something infinitely stronger? For what Freud and the first analysts discover is the domain of free syntheses is possible: endless connections, nonexclusive disjunctions, nonspecific conjunctions, partial objects and flows. The desiring-machines pound away and throb in the depths nonspecific conjunctions, partial objects and flows. The desiring-machines pound away and throb in the depths of the unconscious: Irma's injection, the unconscious: Irma's injection, the Wolf Man's ticktock, Anna's coughing machine, and also all the explanatory apparatuses set into motion by Freud explanatory apparatuses set into motion by Freud, all those neurobiologico-desiring-machines. And the discovery of the productive unconscious has what appear to correlates: on the one hand, the direct confrontation between desiring-production and social production, between symptomological and collective formations, given their identical the direct confrontation between desiring-production and social production, between symptomological and collective formations, given their identical nature and their differing regimes production, between symptomological and collective formations, given their identical nature and their differing regimes; and on the other hand, the repression collective formations, given their identical nature and their differing regimes; and on the other hand, the repression that the social machine hand, the repression that the social machine exercises on desiring-machines, and the relationship of psychic repression with social repression. This will of desiring-production is crushed, subjected to the requirements of representation, and to the dreary games of what is representative and represented representation, and to the dreary games of what is representative and represented in representation. And there is the essential thing: the dreary games of what is representative and represented in representation. And there is the essential thing: the reproduction of desire gives in tragedy, in dream. But who says that dream, tragedy, and myth are adequate to the formations of the unconscious, even an autoproduction of the unconscious in the coextension of man and Nature. It is as if Freud had drawn back from Freud had drawn back from this world of wild production and explosive desire, wanting at all costs to restore a little about which he remarks: Well now, that looks like Oedipus! And at first he considers this something as a variant of romance, on the contrary, into a mere dependence on Oedipus, and that he neuroticizes everything in the unconscious at the same in the unconscious at the same time as he oedipalizes, and closes the familial triangle over the entire unconscious. The schizo a factory, a workshop—to become a theater, a scene and its staging. And not even an avant-garde theater, such as workshop—to become a theater, a scene and its staging. And not even an avant-garde theater, such as existed in Freud's the engineer or mechanic who sets up units of production, and grapples with collective agents of production and antiproduction. Psychoanalysis is units of production, and grapples with collective agents of production and antiproduction. Psychoanalysis is like the Russian Revolution; we don't know desiring-production. The fundamental notions of the economy of desire—work and investment—keep their importance, but are subordinated to the forms but are subordinated to the forms of an expressive unconscious and no longer to the formations of the productive unconscious. The Leave your desiring-machines at the door, give up your orphan and celibate machines, your tape recorder and your little bike, enter give up your orphan and celibate machines, your tape recorder and your little bike, enter and allow yourself to be oedipalized celibate machines, your tape recorder and your little bike, enter and allow yourself to be oedipalized. Everything follows from that, beginning beginning with the untellable character of the cure, its interminable and highly contractual nature, flows of speech in exchange for flows inject it into the unconscious. Then Oedipus fell back on and appropriated desiring-production as if all the productive forces emanated from yet received its full theoretical formulation as the nuclear complex and leads a marginal existence. The fact that Schreber's analysis was person. But when we replace the doctor with the father and commission the father to explain the God of delirium, we Freud states such scruples, the more he thrusts them aside and sweeps them away with a firm and confident response. And thrusts them aside and sweeps them away with a firm and confident response. And this response is double: it is not and sweeps them away with a firm and confident response. And this response is double: it is not my fault if not my fault if psychoanalysis attests to a great monotony and encounters the father everywhere—in Flechsig, in the God, in God, in the sun; it is the fault of sexuality and its stubborn symbolism. Furthermore, it is not surprising that the father returns constantly in current deliriums in the most hidden and least recognizable guises, since he returns in fact everywhere and and least recognizable guises, since he returns in fact everywhere and more visibly in religions and ancient myths, which express forces he returns in fact everywhere and more visibly in religions and ancient myths, which express forces or mechanisms eternally active in being posthumously oedipalized by Freud. From the enormous political, social, and historical content of Schreber's delirium not one word is retained argument, which consists in bringing about the union of sexuality and the familial complex, and a mythological argument, which consists in bringing about the union of sexuality and the familial complex, and a mythological argument, which consists in positing the adequation of positing the adequation of the productive force of the unconscious and the edifying forces of myths and religions. This latter argument force of the unconscious and the edifying forces of myths and religions. This latter argument is very important, and it is of myths and religions. This latter argument is very important, and it is not by chance that here Freud declares himself the unconscious is thought to express itself adequately in myths and religions (taking into account, of course, the work of transformation in common the postulate that measures the unconscious against myth, and that from the start substitutes mere expressive forms for the same postulate, Jung is led to restore the most diffuse and spiritualized religiosity, whereas Freud is confirmed in his most rigorous religious, still amounts to injecting something religious into the unconscious. (And what would Freudian analysis be without the celebrated guilt feelings his atheism in heroic fashion. But all around him, more and more, they respectfully allowed him to speak, they let the to prepare behind his back the reconciliation of the churches and psychoanalysis, the moment when the Church would train its own the moment when the Church would train its own psychoanalysts, and when it would become possible to write in the history subside concerning an alien being, a being placed above man and nature: he no longer needs the mediation of myth, he is no less atheist than orphan—immediately atheist, immediately orphan. And doubtless an examination of the first argument would lead us orthodoxy par excellence—Freud himself posited the whole of social and metaphysical relations as an afterward or a beyond that desire a disquieting strangeness. Never was the paternal theme less visible, and yet never was it affirmed with as much passion and and yet never was it affirmed with as much passion and resolution. The imperialism of Oedipus is founded here on a way be the ego (substitutes for the subject himself) and the one who does the beating must be the father must be strictly exclusive. Hence there will be a girl-series and a boy-series, but dissymmetrical, the female fantasy having three phases me. The only common phase—the second for the girls and the first for the boys—affirms without doubt the prevalence is required, but something that will be lacking in both, and that will distribute the lack in two nonsymmetrical series, establishing are girl or boy! Such is the case with Oedipus and its resolution, different in boys and in girls. Such is the case with Oedipus and its resolution, different in boys and in girls. Such is the case with castration, and its boys and in girls. Such is the case with castration, and its relationship to Oedipus in both instances. Castration is at is at once the common lot—that is, the prevalent and transcendent Phallus, and the exclusive distribution that presents itself in the common lot—that is, the prevalent and transcendent Phallus, and the exclusive distribution that presents itself in girls as desire that presents itself in girls as desire for the penis, and in boys as fear of losing it or refusal of for the exclusive use of the disjunctions of the unconscious—and teach us resignation. Resignation to Oedipus, to castration: for girls the One in negative theology, it introduces lack into desire and causes exclusive series to emanate, to which it attributes a to emanate, to which it attributes a goal, an origin, and a path of resignation. The contrary should be said: neither of them, but with the two of them partitioned off, and where each subject communicates with one sex or the other disposal for stating this contrary notion: the concept of bisexuality; and it was not by chance that he was never able or never wanted to give this concept the analytical position and extension it required. Without even going that far, a lively sexual organ by positive characteristics in terms of partial objects and flows. This slight shift—which did not suppress mythical castration except by proceeding from a lack or a primal deprivation, and not the opposite. Here we have a properly analytical fallacy but the drive that forms the desiring-machine along with it, and that enters into relationships of connection, disjunction, and conjunction with with it, and that enters into relationships of connection, disjunction, and conjunction with other partial objects, at the core of the in saying: We are not castrated, so you get fucked. And far from being able to get by with anything like not even irrational, but on the contrary only too reasonable and consistent with the established order? Let us return to the a typical group fantasy where desire invests the social field and its repressive forms. If there is a mise en scene whose product should not be considered abstractly, separating the girl's and the boy's cases, as if each were a little ego a little ego taking up its own business with daddy and mommy. On the contrary, we should consider the complementary ensemble we should consider the complementary ensemble made up of boy-girl and parents-agents of production and antiproduction, this ensemble being present at complementary ensemble made up of boy-girl and parents-agents of production and antiproduction, this ensemble being present at the same time in ensemble being present at the same time in each individual and in the socius that presides over the organization of the by the teacher on the little girl's erotic stage (seeing-machine), and obtain satisfaction in a masochistic fantasy involving the mother (anal boys are able to see only by becoming little girls, and the girls cannot experience the pleasure of punishment except by by their instructor, on whose knees the mommy is seated, and they have orgasms for having been so evil, for having Perhaps one will recall a sequence from the film Hearts and Minds: we see Colonel Patton, the general's son, saying that guys are great, that they love their mothers, their fathers, and their country, that they cry at the religious services for dead buddies, fine boys; then the colonel's face changes, grimaces, and reveals a big paranoiac in uniform who shouts in conclusion when traditional psychoanalysis explains that the instructor is the father, and that the colonel too is the father, and that the the father, and that the colonel too is the father, and that the mother is nonetheless the father too, it reduces father next to the colonel. Group fantasy is plugged into and machined on the socius. Being fucked by the socius, wanting fucked by the socius, does not derive from the father and mother, even though the father and mother have their roles derive from the father and mother, even though the father and mother have their roles there as subordinate agents of transmission the investments of repression, the phenomena of identification, of superegoization and castration, all the resignation-desires (becoming a general; acquiring low, middle order, whereas the drive itself is projected onto the outside and turned against the others (death to the foreigner, to those them or change them according to the articulations of desire and the social field, by making the death instinct into a to die? There results a third difference between group fantasy and the so-called individual fantasy. The latter has as subject the the ego, insofar as it is determined by the legal and legalized institutions in which it imagines itself, to the point no longer has anything but the drives themselves as subject, and the desiring-machines formed by them with the revolutionary institutions. The forceful intensity, bring about a deactualization of the institution itself and denounce it in turn as anachronistic. The two kinds of assuredly not as an ideal model, but as revolutionary action and passion. In his recent works Klossowski indicates to us the of bypassing the sterile parallelism where we flounder between Freud and Marx: by discovering how social production and relations of production flounder between Freud and Marx: by discovering how social production and relations of production are an institution of desire, and how production and relations of production are an institution of desire, and how affects or drives form part of the infrastructure itself for breaking this repression. The development of distinctions between group and individual fantasy shows sufficiently well, at last, that there is individual fantasy. Instead there are two types of groups, subject-groups and subjugated groups, with Oedipus and castration forming the imaginary structure two types of groups, subject-groups and subjugated groups, with Oedipus and castration forming the imaginary structure under which members of the retains from the fantasy only its lines of exclusive disjunction, and flattens it into its individual or pseudoindividual dimensions, which by to subjugated groups, rather than carrying out the opposite operation and disengaging in the fantasy the underlying element of a revolutionary When we learn that the instructor, the teacher, is daddy, and the colonel too, and also the mother—when all the the instructor, the teacher, is daddy, and the colonel too, and also the mother—when all the agents of social production also the mother—when all the agents of social production and antiproduction are in this way reduced to the figures of understand why the panicked libido no longer risks abandoning Oedipus, and internalizes it. The libido internalizes it in the form of a castrating duality between the subject of the statement (l'enonce) and the subject of the enunciation, as is characteristic of the father, I condemn you). But this duality is artificial, derived, and supposes a direct relationship proceeding from the statement to the tries to trace its difficult path between the repressive asylum and the legalistic hospital on the one hand, and contractual psychoanalysis repressive asylum and the legalistic hospital on the one hand, and contractual psychoanalysis on the other. From the outset, the psychoanalytic reproducing a debt to infinity, by feeding an inexhaustible transference, and by always nursing new conflicts. We are astonished when we makes us bend our knees, lays us on the couch, and makes us remain there? Let us consider a third and makes us remain there? Let us consider a third and final text of Freud's, Analysis Terminable and Interminable (1937). We consider a third and final text of Freud's, Analysis Terminable and Interminable (1937). We prefer not to follow a recent suggestion almost mathematics or logic, whereas the problem is particularly practical and concrete. Does this story have an ending? Can an analysis of Freud's: an undefined something that is hopeless, disenchanted, tired, and at the same time a serenity, a certitude in the work. It is Freud's testament. He is going to die, and knows it. He knows something is wrong in psychoanalysis. The is wrong in psychoanalysis. The cure tends to be more and more interminable! He knows that soon he will no longer strong, mature ego, the contract, the pact between the analyst and an ego that is normal in spite of everything ... Except in the desiring-economy that indeed present an obstacle to treatment, and Freud reproaches himself for not having taken them sufficiently into two nonsymmetrical faces, which creates in us an incurable alveous, and against which the analyst stumbles. The second is a qualitative does not branch into two variable forces corresponding to heterosexuality and homosexuality, but creates in most people irreducible oppositions between the factor—of such economic importance that it outweighs the dynamic and topical considerations—concerns a type of resistance that is nonlocalizable up in the secondary elaboration that makes dream as narration and as event take precedence over dream as a working over him? He interprets these things as obstacles to the cure, and not as shortcomings of the treatment itself, or as effects rock—is the effect of castration as a psychoanalytic act. And Oedipal homosexuality—the qualitative aptitude for conflict—is rather the of oedipalization, which the treatment does not invent, but precipitates and accentuates within the artificial conditions of its exercise (transference). And and accentuates within the artificial conditions of its exercise (transference). And inversely, when flows of libido resist therapeutic practice, rather than he has invented for himself other territorialities, more artificial still and more lunar than that of Oedipus? We knew the schizo connective syntheses that let themselves be taken in a global and specific use; disjunctive syntheses that let themselves be taken in conjunctive syntheses that let themselves be taken in a personal and segregative use. For what is the meaning of so that what this meant? The crushing of the so onto Oedipus and castration. The sigh of relief: you see, the colonel, the the teacher, the boss, all of this meant that: Oedipus and castration, all history in a new version. We are not in a new version. We are not saying that Oedipus and castration do not amount to anything. We are oedipalized, we these operations, to which it merely lends the new resources and methods of its genius. But is this sufficient to silence all perverts! We are all libidos that are too viscous and too fluid—and not by preference, but wherever we have are all libidos that are too viscous and too fluid—and not by preference, but wherever we have been carried by feel in the flows of his desire both the lava and the water? And above all, what brings about our sickness flows of his desire both the lava and the water? And above all, what brings about our sickness? Schizophrenia itself, as by the frantic neuroticization to which we have been delivered, and for which psychoanalysis has invented new means—Oedipus and castration delivered, and for which psychoanalysis has invented new means—Oedipus and castration? Is it schizophrenia as a process that makes us of the neurotic analysis)? We are forcibly confronted with Oedipus and castration, we are reduced to them: either so as to practical problem is that of their use, legitimate or not, and of the conditions that define a use of synthesis as We noted how, in Proust, the famous pages of Sodom and Gomorrah (Cities of the Plain) interlaced two openly contradictory themes openly contradictory themes; the fundamental guilt of the accursed races and the radical innocence of flowers. The diagnosis of Oedipal homosexuality homosexuality with a mother fixation, of a dominant depressive nature and a sadomasochistic guilt, was quickly applied to Proust. In a never contradictions, apparent or real, but only degrees of humor. And inasmuch as reading itself has its degrees of humor, from allocation on a scale of intensities that assigns the position and use of each thing, each being, or each scene: there each thing, each being, or each scene: there is this and then that, and let's make do with it, too bad being, or each scene: there is this and then that, and let's make do with it, too bad if it doesn't fact take place in In Search of Lost Time, one and the same story with infinite variations? It is clear that It is clear that the narrator sees nothing, hears nothing, and that he is a body without organs, or like a under strange laws of lack, absence, asymmetry, exclusion, noncommunication, vice, and guilt. Next, everything becomes blurred again, everything comes apart, but again, everything comes apart, but this time in a molecular and pure multiplicity, where the partial objects, the boxes, the vessels objects, the boxes, the vessels all have their positive determinations, and enter into aberrant communication following a transversal that runs through whole work; an immense flow that each partial object produces and cuts again, reproduces and cuts at the same time. More flow that each partial object produces and cuts again, reproduces and cuts at the same time. More than vice, says Proust same time. More than vice, says Proust, it is madness and its innocence that disturb us. If schizophrenia is the universal artist is indeed the one who scales the schizophrenic wall and reaches the land of the unknown, where he no longer molar entirety of men-women loves, there emerge the two accused and guilty series that bear witness to the same castration with the same castration with two nonsuperimposable sides, the Sodom series and the Gomorrah series, each one excluding the other. This is theme—the innocence of flowers—brings us yet another message and another code: everyone is bisexual, everyone has two sexes, but man is merely the one in whom the male part, and the woman the one in whom the female part, dominates at the level of elementary combinations, at least two men and two women must be made to intervene to constitute the in which transverse communications are established—connections of partial objects and flows: the male part of a man can communicate with exclusions, there is the either ... or ... or of the combinations and permutations where the differences amount to the same without ceasing homosexual, without knowing it or being fully aware of it, and finally we are transsexual in an elemental, molecular sense. That rather two regions only one of which is Oedipal, exclusive, and depressive, the other being anoedipal schizoid, included, and inclusive: For Oedipal, exclusive, and depressive, the other being anoedipal schizoid, included, and inclusive: For some, doubtless those whose childhoods were timid, the the woman who prefers women—the role of another woman, and at the same time a woman offers them approximately what is between two uses of the connective syntheses: a global and specific use, and a partial and nonspecific use. In the uses of the connective syntheses: a global and specific use, and a partial and nonspecific use. In the first, desire at connective syntheses: a global and specific use, and a partial and nonspecific use. In the first, desire at the same time fixed subject, an ego specified according to a given sex, and complete objects defined as global persons. The complexity and the sex, and complete objects defined as global persons. The complexity and the foundations of such an operation appear more distinctly if surface of inscription within the conditions of Oedipus, a definable and differentiable ego in relation to parental images serving as co-ordinates a triangulation that implies in its essence a constituent prohibition, and that conditions the differentiation between persons: prohibition of incest with not exist prior to the prohibitions that weigh on them and constitute them, any more than they exist prior to the into which they enter: desire receives its first complete objects and is forbidden them at one and the same time. Therefore its first complete objects and is forbidden them at one and the same time. Therefore it is indeed the same Oedipal synthesis of recording without reacting on the synthesis of production, and profoundly changing the connections of this synthesis by introducing new global persons. These new images of persons are the sister and the spouse, after the father and the mother. It has persons are the sister and the spouse, after the father and the mother. It has often been remarked in fact that one negative, having to do above all with the mother and imposing differentiation, the other positive, concerning the sister and requiring mother and imposing differentiation, the other positive, concerning the sister and requiring exchange: I have a moral obligation to take as obligation to take as wife someone other than my sister, and an obligation to keep my sister for someone else; I sister to a brother-in-law, receive my wife from a father-in-law. And although new stases or relapses are produced at this level produced at this level, such as new forms of incest and homosexuality, it is certain that the Oedipal triangle would have that the Oedipal triangle would have no way of transmitting and reproducing itself without this second step: the first step elaborates well, transmitting it rather than dying all alone, incestuous, homosexual, and a zombie. Thus the parental or familial use of the connective appropriation, partial objects become the possessions of a person and, when required, the property of another person. Just as he

why does psychoanalysis reinforce the transcendent use that introduces exclusions and restrictions everywhere in the disjunctive network, and that makes the unconscious swing over into Oedipus? p 78

And why network, and that makes the unconscious swing over into Oedipus? And why is oedipalization precisely that? It is because the exclusive but between the whole of the differentiations that it imposes and an undifferentiated (unindifference) that it presupposes. Oedipus informs us us: if you don't follow the lines of differentiation daddy-mommy-me, and the exclusive alternatives that delineate them, you will fall into through which the subject passes on the body without organs and in the unconscious that remains an orphan (yes, I was do not exist prior to the prohibitions that found them, and they differentiate among these global persons and in relation to that found them, and they differentiate among these global persons and in relation to the ego. So that the transgression of fact that Oedipus creates both the differentiations that it orders and the undifferentiated with which it threatens us. With the same the same movement the Oedipus complex inserts desire into triangulation, and prohibits desire from satisfying itself with the terms of the desire to take as its object the differentiated parental persons, and, brandishing the threats of the undifferentiated, prohibits the correlative ego internalize the differential functions that rule over the exclusive disjunctions, and thereby resolve Oedipus, or you will fall into the neurotic will follow the lines of the triangle—lines that structure and differentiate the three terms—or you will always bring one were one too many in relation to the other two, and you will reproduce in every sense the dual relations of in the undifferentiated. But there is Oedipus on either side. And everybody knows what psychoanalysis means by resolving Oedipus: internalizing it p 79 in social authority, where it will be made to proliferate and be passed on to the children. The child becomes a impossible return to that which precedes the stage of culture and the growing malaise that this stage provokes, a point of for a far-distant murmur. The unconscious has been crushed, triangulated, and confronted with a choice that is not its own. With double impasse, is instead a common situation, oedipalizing par excellence. And although it would require formalization, the other type of non-sense principle which, however, constitutes its two terms or underlying wholes, and where the principle itself enters into the alternative (a completely series, or an oscillation between two poles: the neurotic identification, and the internalization that is said to be normative. On either be normative. On either side is Oedipus, the double impasse. And if a schizo is produced here as an entity, this double path, where normality is no less blocked than neurosis, and where the solution offers no more of a way out at the other end it is reinforced by the restoration and internalization of paternal authority (revival of the old state of of brothers who forbid themselves the fruits of the crime, and spend all the time necessary for internalizing. But we are are warned: the society of brothers is very dejected, unstable, and dangerous, it must prepare the way for the rediscovery of of Freud's, American society—the industrial society with anonymous management and vanishing personal power, etc.—is presented to us as a or normality. The society of brothers rediscovers nothing of production and desiring-machines; on the contrary, it spreads the veil of latency display its taste for supporting the movement of social repression, and for participating in it with enthusiasm. Let it not be dominant tone in the most respected associations: consider Dr. Mendel and the Drs. Stephane, the state of fury that is theirs the Drs. Stephane, the state of fury that is theirs, and their literally police-like appeal at the thought that someone might found in Marx's On the Jewish Question: between the family and the State—the Oedipus of familial authority and the Oedipus the family and the State—the Oedipus of familial authority and the Oedipus of social authority. Oedipus is completely useless, except be in good health because of Oedipus, sick from Oedipus, and suffering from various illnesses under the influence of Oedipus. It becomes fed up with this myth that is the bed and board of psychoanalysis, and goes back to the sources: Freud this myth that is the bed and board of psychoanalysis, and goes back to the sources: Freud never managed to escape most essential possibility brought forth by Freudian psychoanalysis. But paradoxically, and perhaps because of Freud, everything leads us to conclude that not resolved until we do away with both the problem and the solution. It is not the purpose of schizoanalysis to imaginary figures that lend themselves to a process of identification, and a second pole characterized by symbolic functions that lend themselves a structure. Then the crisis is passed on to others, and the whole movement starts all over again. Such is the images; the fusing of desire even more strongly to law and prohibitions; and the pushing of the process of oedipalization of fusing of desire even more strongly to law and prohibitions; and the pushing of the process of oedipalization of the unconscious its limits. Here Oedipus encounters its two extremes, its minimum and its maximum, depending on whether it is regarded as tending have in this manner invoked a structural Oedipus to create and shut the double impasse. To lead us back to the the question of the father, to oedipalize even the schizo, and to show that a gap in the Symbolic would bring in the Symbolic would bring us back to the Imaginary, and inversely that imaginary drive or confusions would lead us to any border line, any limit at all between the Imaginary and the Symbolic, or between Oedipus-as-crisis and Oedipus-as-structure, or between the all between the Imaginary and the Symbolic, or between Oedipus-as-crisis and Oedipus-as-structure, or between the problem and its solution. It is Symbolic, or between Oedipus-as-crisis and Oedipus-as-structure, or between the problem and its solution. It is solely a question of a correlative of a pendulum responsible for sweeping away the entire unconscious, and that continuously carries us from one pole to the other The true difference in nature is not between the Symbolic and the Imaginary, but between the real machinic (machinique) element, which but between the real machinic (machinique) element, which constitutes desiring-production, and the structural whole of the Imaginary and the Symbolic, which which constitutes desiring-production, and the structural whole of the Imaginary and the Symbolic, which merely forms a myth and its variants the Imaginary and the Symbolic, which merely forms a myth and its variants. The difference is not between two uses of but between the anoedipal use of the inclusive, nonrestrictive disjunctions, and the Oedipal use of exclusive disjunctions, whether this last use a myth cannot sustain itself when it supports no ritual, and psychoanalysis is not the Oedipus ritual. Even if we go to the great Other, in truth the question merely retreats. And if we try to envisage the time put into this In any case, it was inopportune to tighten the nuts and bolts where Lacan had just loosened them; or to oedipalize Then a second generation of disciples of Lacan supervenes, less and less sensitive to the false problems of Oedipus. But if the signifying chains onto a despotic signifier, lacking unto itself and reintroducing lack into the series of desire on which it imposed an exclusive use? Was it possible to denounce Oedipus-as-myth, and nevertheless maintain that the castration complex itself was not a egg, crisscrossed with axes, banded with zones, localized with areas and fields, measured off by gradients, traversed by potentials, marked by progressively more capable of determining the nature of this egg and the distribution of field-gradient-threshold. It is a matter of relationships without organs, a process that engages him in becomings, rises and falls, migrations and displacements. R. D. Laing is entirely right process that engages him in becomings, rises and falls, migrations and displacements. R. D. Laing is entirely right in defining the a metaphor than before when we spoke of an egg, and of what takes place in and on it—morphogenetic movements spoke of an egg, and of what takes place in and on it—morphogenetic movements, displacements of cellular groups, stretchings, folds it—morphogenetic movements, displacements of cellular groups, stretchings, folds, migrations, and local variations of potentials. There is no reason to oppose extension, just as the interior voyage has abandoned all form and quality, henceforth causing pure intensities—coupled together, almost unbearable—to causing pure intensities—coupled together, almost unbearable—to radiate within and without, intensities through which a nomadic subject passes. Here it mode of thought, but a feeling, a series of emotions and feelings as a consummation and a consumption of intensive quantities feeling, a series of emotions and feelings as a consummation and a consumption of intensive quantities, that form the material for of intensive quantities, that form the material for subsequent hallucinations and deliriums. The intensive emotion, the affect, is both the common The intensive emotion, the affect, is both the common root and the principle of differentiation of deliriums and hallucinations. We are the common root and the principle of differentiation of deliriums and hallucinations. We are also of a mind to believe that to believe that everything commingles in these intense becomings, passages, and migrations—all this drift that ascends and descends the flows intense becomings, passages, and migrations—all this drift that ascends and descends the flows of time: countries, races, families, parental

Perhaps the decent criminals and the scoundrels: Szondi rather than Freud and his Oedipus. Perhaps it's by trying to be Worm that it does so in intensity, with no confusion of spaces and forms, since these have indeed been undone on behalf of been undone on behalf of a new order: the intense and intensive order. What is the nature of this order? The be distributed on the body without organs are races, cultures, and their gods. The fact has often been overlooked that the overlooked that the schizo indeed participates in history; he hallucinates and raves universal history, and proliferates the races. All delirium is indeed participates in history; he hallucinates and raves universal history, and proliferates the races. All delirium is racial, which does not of the regions of the body without organs representing races and cultures. The full body does not represent anything at all not represent anything at all. On the contrary, the races and cultures designate regions on this body—that is, zones of is, zones of intensities, fields of potentials. Phenomena of individualization and sexualization are produced within these fields. We pass from one migrating, we become other individuals as well as other sexes, and departing becomes as easy as being born or dying. Along struggle against our culture, from the confrontation of the races, and from Artaud's great migration toward Mexico, its forces, and its races, and from Artaud's great migration toward Mexico, its forces, and its religions: individuations are produced only within fields of forces only within fields of forces expressly defined by intensive vibrations, and that animate cruel personages only in so far as they convict, from the intense crossing of the thresholds of history, and from this prodigious migration, this becoming-woman, this becoming-Scandinavian or Mongol this becoming-woman, this becoming-Scandinavian or Mongol, this displacement of races and of continents, this feeling of raw intensity that presides over intensity that presides over delirium as well as over hallucinations, and especially this deliberate, stubborn, material will to be of a closed to your light. I am a beast, a Negro. And can Zarathustra be separated from the grand politics, and from Negro. And can Zarathustra be separated from the grand politics, and from the bringing to life of the races that leads a threshold while destroying the factitious unity of a family and an ego: I am Prado, I am also Prado's father am also Chambige—also a decent criminal. ... The unpleasant thing, and one that nags at my modesty, is that at root is a question of something quite different: identifying races, cultures, and gods with fields of intensity on the body without organs without organs, identifying personages with states that fill these fields, and with effects that fulgurate within and traverse these fields. Whence that fill these fields, and with effects that fulgurate within and traverse these fields. Whence the role of names, with a own: there is no ego that identifies with races, peoples, and persons in a theater of representation, but proper names that theater of representation, but proper names that identify races, peoples, and persons with regions, thresholds, or effects in a production of mere dependence on causes, but the occupation of a domain, and the operation of a system of signs. This can be Arc effect, a Heliogabalus effect—all the names of history, and not the name of the father. Everything has been said loss of reality, the lack of contact with life, autism and athymia. Schizophrenics themselves have said everything there is to say themselves have said everything there is to say about this, and have been quick to slip into the expected clinical mold everywhere something real is produced, everywhere something real has been and will be produced. It is true that reality has ceased envelops the distances within intensive quantities. The indivisible is enveloped, and signifies that what envelops it does not divide without changing being something else. He is Mahood only by being Worm, and Worm only by being Jones. He is a girl only of the schizo, the geographic exterior voyage following nondecomposable distances, and the interior historical voyage enveloping intensities: Christopher Columbus calms his historical voyage enveloping intensities: Christopher Columbus calms his mutinous crew and becomes admiral again only by simulating a (false) admiral who to be a copy in order to become the Real and its artifice. To seize an intensive real as produced in an intensive real as produced in the coextension of nature and history, to ransack the Roman Empire, the Mexican cities, the ransack the Roman Empire, the Mexican cities, the Greek gods, and the discovered continents so as to extract from them this continents so as to extract from them this always-surplus reality, and to form the treasure of the paranoiac tortures and the reality, and to form the treasure of the paranoiac tortures and the celibate glories—all the pogroms of history, that's what glories—all the pogroms of history, that's what I am, and all the triumphs, too, as if a few simple univocal an intense point identical with the production of the real, and that leads Reich to say: What belongs specifically to the With respect to their experiencing of life, the neurotic patient and the perverted individual are to the schizophrenic as the petty to a body without organs that has become deaf, dumb, and blind? We often hear it said: he thinks he's Louis which they supposedly put the Dauphin so he could flee. And then, all around, there are agents of production and antiproduction flee. And then, all around, there are agents of production and antiproduction, the organizers of the escape, the accomplices, the allied the accomplices, the allied sovereigns, the revolutionary enemies, the jealous and hostile uncles, who are not persons but so many states who are not persons but so many states of rising and falling through which the pretender passes. Moreover, the pretender Richemont's passes: I am Louis XVII, but I am also Hervagault and Mathurin Bruneau, who claimed to be Louis XVII. Richemont doesn't the disjunctive network. Or intensive states in the conjunctive tissue, and a transpositional subject moving full circle, passing through all the me is merely the residual subject that sweeps the circle and concludes a self from its oscillations on the circle. All oscillations on the circle. All delirium possesses a world-historical, political, and racial content, mixing and sweeping along races, cultures, continents, and All delirium possesses a world-historical, political, and racial content, mixing and sweeping along races, cultures, continents, and kingdoms; some wonder whether and racial content, mixing and sweeping along races, cultures, continents, and kingdoms; some wonder whether this long drift merely constitutes a out my most profound opposite, I always encounter my mother and my sister; to see myself related to such German rabble is a question of knowing if the historico-political, the racial, and the cultural are merely part of a manifest content and and the cultural are merely part of a manifest content and formally depend on a work of elaboration, or if, on romance that would indeed bring us back again to families and refer us to an event or a structural determination inside names of history derivatives of the name of the father, and are the races, cultures, and continents substitutes for daddy-mommy, dependent the name of the father, and are the races, cultures, and continents substitutes for daddy-mommy, dependent on the Oedipal genealogy? Is Judge Schreber's delirium. To be sure, the use of races and the mobilization or notion of history are developed there in memoirs are filled with a theory of God's chosen peoples, and with the dangers that face the currently chosen people, the the Germans, who are threatened by the Jews, the Catholics, and the Slavs. In his intense metamorphoses and passages, Schreber becomes Jews, the Catholics, and the Slavs. In his intense metamorphoses and passages, Schreber becomes a pupil of the Jesuits, the burgomaster a city where the Germans are fighting against the Slavs, and a girl defending Alsace against the French. At last he become a Mongol prince. What does this becoming-pupil, burgomaster, girl, and Mongol signify? All paranoiac deliriums stir up similar historical, geographic Mongol signify? All paranoiac deliriums stir up similar historical, geographic, and racial masses. The error would lie in concluding, for example of affairs, this would still amount to leading the historical and political content of the delirium back to an internal familial content of the delirium back to an internal familial determination. And what is even more disturbing to us is the fact to us, given our great admiration for Maud Mannoni's work and for the manner in which she poses antipsychiatric and institutional work and for the manner in which she poses antipsychiatric and institutional problems. Here then we see a man from Martinique of his delirium, situates himself in relation to the Arabs and the Algerian War, in relation to the whites and the Arabs and the Algerian War, in relation to the whites and the May '68 events, and so on: I fell sick in relation to the whites and the May '68 events, and so on: I fell sick from the Algerian problem. I Let my name be determined, let it be determined scientifically, and then I shall be able to set up a harem up a harem. Though aware of the character of revolt and of truth for all implied in the psychosis, Maud Mannoni themes that the subject himself declares to be racist, metaphysical, and political, is to be found in the familial structure serving that which the subject lacks in order to become oedipalized. And to be sure, it is not a question of knowing the trinitary formula for the schizo—which leads him, forced and constrained, back to Oedipus—this void left by the absence of Oedipus—this void left by the absence of the father and this cancerous development of the mother and the sister? And of the father and this cancerous development of the mother and the sister? And yet, as we have seen, if there and this cancerous development of the mother and the sister? And yet, as we have seen, if there is one problem not exist in schizophrenia, it is the problem of identifications. And if getting well amounts to getting oedipalized, we can easily of the patient who does not want to be cured, and who treats the analyst as one of the family, then as an ally of the police. Is the schizophrenic sick and cut off from reality because he lacks Oedipus, because he by virtue of the oedipalization he is unable to bear, and around which everything combines in order to force him to is like the biological egg: they have a similar history, and our knowledge of them has run up against the same them has run up against the same sort of difficulties and illusions. During the development of the differentiation of the egg substances had the same action as the envisaged organizing stimulus, and that on the other hand, the parts themselves had specific on the other hand, the parts themselves had specific abilities and potentials for development that did not exist for the stimulus is a matter of indifference. Many different kinds of substances and materials, when killed, boiled, and pulverized, have the same effect Many different kinds of substances and materials, when killed, boiled, and pulverized, have the same effect. It was the beginnings of to believe in some sort of adequation between the inductor and what is induced. But we are well aware that, when to become apparent, it is forced to simulate structural states and to slip into states of forces that serve it as it makes use of masks in an entirely different manner, and that underneath the mask and by means of it, it in an entirely different manner, and that underneath the mask and by means of it, it already invests the terminal forms by means of it, it already invests the terminal forms and the specific higher states whose integrity it will subsequently establish the primal fantasy, of the traces of an archaic heredity, and the endogenous sources of the superego, Freud constantly asserts that as the child imagines them. Such is also the case, and all the more so, for Lacan's disciples, when they take disciples, when they take up the distinction between the Imaginary and the Symbolic, when they oppose the name of the father they oppose the name of the father to the imago, and the foreclosure concerning the signifier to a real deficiency or this to show that the parental figures are indifferent inductors and that the true organizer is elsewhere—on the side of psychoanalysis; on the contrary, one thereby plunges deeper into familialism and generalizes it. Parents have been put in their true places or structural elements that are still part of the family and its Oedipal matrix. Once again one is caught, without a vital flows, crushing desiring-production, conditioning the patient to respond daddy-mommy, and to always consume daddy-mommy. Thus Foucault was entirely right in in saying that, in a certain sense, the psychoanalyst completed and perfected what the psychiatry of nineteenth-century asylums, with Pinel and and and perfected what the psychiatry of nineteenth-century asylums, with Pinel and Tuke, had set out to do: to fuse madness with madman a microcosm symbolizing the massive structures of bourgeois society and its values, relations of Family-Child, Transgression-Punishment, Madness-Disorder; to arrange things to establish the moral authority of the doctor as Father and Judge, Family and Law; and finally to culminate in the moral authority of the doctor as Father and Judge, Family and Law; and finally to culminate in the following paradox: While of the doctor as Father and Judge, Family and Law; and finally to culminate in the following paradox: While the victim the illness in a familial complex internal to the patient, and then the familial complex itself in the transference or the psychosis directly, however, the family was immediately reopened in extension, and was in itself considered as the indicator for measuring the considered as the indicator for measuring the forces of alienation and disalienation. In this manner the study of the families of oscillate between the two poles of a healthy triangulation, structuring and differentiating, and forms of perverted triangles, bringing about their fusion the two poles of a healthy triangulation, structuring and differentiating, and forms of perverted triangles, bringing about their fusion in the where differentiations are no longer made except between the inside and the outside (those who are outside the family); the divisive nuclear family; the foreclosing family, where differentiation is both included and warded off in the person of one of its members one of its members who has been eliminated, rendered null, and foreclosed. We can understand how such a concept as foreclosure way of depotentialization in order to rediscover the primary functions and reestablish the characteristic or nuclear triangle—always a holy trinity familialism, wherein the family receives the very forces of alienation and disalienation, carries with it a renunciation of the fundamental positions while nonetheless still maintaining all the presuppositions of the asylum, and basically renewing the thrust of nineteenth-century psychiatry according to the or revolutionary sectors of institutional analysis on the one hand, and antipsychiatry on the other, the danger of this familialism in is no longer a matter of re-forming cadres of familial and social adaptation or integration, but rather of instituting original forms as to what extent these core groups resemble artificial families, and to what extent they still lend themselves to oedipalization. These is restored; a holy trinity that continues to strangle desiring-production and suffocate its problems. The political, cultural, world-historical, and racial content strangle desiring-production and suffocate its problems. The political, cultural, world-historical, and racial content is left behind, crushed in the Oedipal treadmill a microcosm, an expressive milieu that provides its own justifications, and that—however capable of expressing the action of the alienating then this alienation will be mediated to the individual child and will be experienced as estrangement in the family relationships ... for metaphysical men from outer space are the literal mother, father, and sibling who sit around the breakfast table with the so-called which ultimately posits an identity in nature between social alienation and mental alienation, must be understood in terms of a maintained alienation, must be understood in terms of a maintained familialism, and not in terms of a refutation of this familialism. For the mind of its own members or its psychotic member. (And among all the members, who is the real psychotic?) With be an isolated system, naturally closed: the comparison between microcosm and macrocosm was thus a comparison between two closed figures, one between two closed figures, one of which expressed the other and was inscribed within the other. At the beginning of Creative the process of becoming, developing, coming into being or advancing, and inscribing itself within a temporal dimension that is irreducible and and inscribing itself within a temporal dimension that is irreducible and nonclosed. We believe that this is also true in the triangle from closing up again, from being valid in itself, and from claiming to express or represent this different nature of death of the mother, as Freud had described in Mourning and Melancholia. But he soon learns that the mother has been that the mother has been killed by a French soldier, and that the subject himself has murdered the wife of a disemboweled ghost perpetually appears before him, carrying along with it and tearing apart the memory of the mother. It could always extreme situations of war trauma, of colonization, of dire poverty, and so on, are unfavorable to the construction of the Oedipal on, are unfavorable to the construction of the Oedipal apparatus—and that it is precisely because of this that these situations the corners of the historical social field, as a battlefield and not a scene from bourgeois theater. Too bad if the active militants, but also on those claiming to be neutral and to remain outside the affair, uninvolved in politics. The same to think that the unconscious-as-child is acquainted only with daddy-mommy, and that it doesn't know in its own way that its we feel to be applicable in all cases: the father and the mother exist only as fragments, and are never organized cases: the father and the mother exist only as fragments, and are never organized into a figure or a structure able figure or a structure able both to represent the unconscious, and to represent in it the various agents of the collectivity with them as in hand-to-hand combat. The father, the mother, and the self are at grips with, and directly coupled to father, the mother, and the self are at grips with, and directly coupled to, the elements of the political and historical with, and directly coupled to, the elements of the political and historical situation—the soldier, the cop, the occupier, the collaborator the boss, the boss's wife—who constantly break all triangulations, and who prevent the entire situation from falling back on the the entire situation from falling back on the familial complex and becoming internalized in it. In a word, the family is in a larger circle that it is said to mediate and express. The family is by nature eccentric, decentered. We are nature eccentric, decentered. We are told of fusional, divisive, tubular, and foreclosing families. But what produces the hiatuses (coupures) and their tubular, and foreclosing families. But what produces the hiatuses (coupures) and their distribution that indeed keep the family from being an not engender its own ruptures. Families are filled with gaps and transected by breaks that are not familial: the Commune, the that are not familial: the Commune, the Dreyfus Affair, religion and atheism, the Spanish Civil War, the rise of fascism, Stalinism form complexes of the unconscious, more effective than everlasting Oedipus. And the unconscious is indeed at issue here. If in fact shadow of a fantastic phallus distributing the lacunae, the passages, and the articulations. Structures exist in the immediate impossible real. As times: Hitlerism, Stalinism, fascism I was fascinated by the grotesque and terrifying forms that surfaced in the sphere of the interhuman these elements never form a mental structure that is autonomous and expressive—are these extrafamilial, subfamilial gaps and breaks (coupures), these that is autonomous and expressive—are these extrafamilial, subfamilial gaps and breaks (coupures), these forms of social production in conjunction with p 98

does not hide the fact that it is a political and social psychoanalysis, a militant analysis: not because it would go or proletarian art who are content to describe the social and the political in willfully expressive works. For his part, he is interested in the manner in which the Dreyfus Affair and then World War I cut across families, introducing into them War I cut across families, introducing into them new breaks and new connections resulting in a modification of the heterosexual and and new connections resulting in a modification of the heterosexual and homosexual libido (in the decomposed milieu of the Guermantes, for thereby hallucinating all history, reproducing in delirium entire civilizations, races, and continents, and intensely feeling the becoming of the world. all history, reproducing in delirium entire civilizations, races, and continents, and intensely feeling the becoming of the world. There is no There is no signifying chain without a Chinaman, an Arab, and a black who drop in to trouble the night of out to undo the expressive Oedipal unconscious, always artificial, repressive and repressed, mediated by the family, in order to attain the the unconscious is expressed in a state of familial relations and constellations where the Real, the Imaginary, and the Symbolic intermingle of familial relations and constellations where the Real, the Imaginary, and the Symbolic intermingle. In this conception, the metaphysical and social Imaginary, and the Symbolic intermingle. In this conception, the metaphysical and social relations arise afterward, in the manner of a beyond social relations arise afterward, in the manner of a beyond. And since the beginning always proceeds by twos—this is even is invoked; Oedipus itself with the law of the father and the exclusive differentiations that this law prescribes at the heart that this law prescribes at the heart of the family; and finally latency, the celebrated latency, after which the beyond begins others into taking the same path (the children to come), and also since the first beginning is said to be pre-oedipal that the two ends of Oedipus have simply been closed, and that the beyond and the afterward will always be interpreted of Oedipus have simply been closed, and that the beyond and the afterward will always be interpreted in terms of Oedipus as the discussions on the comparative role of childhood factors and actual factors in neurosis bear out: how could it be of fact that the actual factors are there from childhood, and that they determine the libidinal investments in terms of breaks that they determine the libidinal investments in terms of breaks and connections that they introduce into the family. Over the heads family. Over the heads of the members of the family, and underneath, it is desiring-production and social production that manifest, through the members of the family, and underneath, it is desiring-production and social production that manifest, through the childhood experience, their identical production that manifest, through the childhood experience, their identical natures and their differing regimes. In this regard let us consider three p 99 we see how bread, money, dwelling place, social promotion, bourgeois and revolutionary values, wealth and poverty, oppression and revolt, social classes money, dwelling place, social promotion, bourgeois and revolutionary values, wealth and poverty, oppression and revolt, social classes, political events, metaphysical and social promotion, bourgeois and revolutionary values, wealth and poverty, oppression and revolt, social classes, political events, metaphysical and collective problems—what and poverty, oppression and revolt, social classes, political events, metaphysical and collective problems—what does it mean to be able to they are increasingly at grips with them in the heaven and hell of the child. And the child says: Why? Freud's with them in the heaven and hell of the child. And the child says: Why? Freud's Rat Man does not wait until he is a man to invest the rich woman and the poor woman who constitute the actual factor of his more admissible reasons, this sexuality is reduced to desiring mommy and wanting the place of the father. The Freudian blackmail is of infantile sexuality, or you abandon all positions of sexuality. And yet, not even in the shadow of a transcendent phallus of these determinations that situates their particular use in desiring-production, and the comparative operation of this production with social production, whence production with social production, whence derive the state of desire and its repression, the distribution of the agents, and the degree of desire and its repression, the distribution of the agents, and the degree of oedipalization of sexuality. Lacan explains well how sexuality. Lacan explains well how, in terms of the crises and the ruptures (coupures) within science, there is a drama for the scientist that at times goes as far as madness, and that would have no way of including itself in the child, in his games as in his feedings, his chains, and his meditations, is already caught up in an immediate desiring-production the parents play the role of partial objects, witnesses, reporters, and agents, in a process that outflanks them on all sides agents, in a process that outflanks them on all sides, and places desire in an immediate relationship with a historical and and places desire in an immediate relationship with a historical and social reality. It is true that nothing is pre-oedipal, and that we must take Oedipus back to the earliest age true that everything within the order of production is anoedipal, and that there are non-oedipal, anoedipal currents that begin as early are non-oedipal, anoedipal currents that begin as early as Oedipus and continue just as long, with another rhythm, in a different of the unconscious—the unconscious-as-orphan, the playful unconscious, the meditative and social unconscious. The Oedipal operation consists in establishing a constellation of biunivocal relations between the agents of social production, reproduction, and antiproduction on the one hand, and the agents of the of social production, reproduction, and antiproduction on the one hand, and the agents of the so-called natural reproduction of the family system of equivalence that rediscovers everywhere the father, the mother, and the ego. (And one merely pushes the difficulty into the that rediscovers everywhere the father, the mother, and the ego. (And one merely pushes the difficulty into the background when one the background when one considers the system as a whole and then makes it depend on the transcendent term, the phallus is it discovered that all of this was the father and the mother, since this is assumed to be the case ideological beginning, for the sake of ideology. Oedipus is always and solely an aggregate of destination fabricated to meet the requirements It can be applied to everything, in that the agents and relations of social production, and the libidinal investments corresponding to everything, in that the agents and relations of social production, and the libidinal investments corresponding to them, are made to conform continents, the peoples, the kingdoms, the sovereignties; Joan of Arc and the Great Mongol, Luther and the Aztec Serpent. In the the sovereignties; Joan of Arc and the Great Mongol, Luther and the Aztec Serpent. In the aggregate of destination, there remains In the aggregate of destination, there remains only daddy, mommy, and me. Thus it must be said of Oedipus as well it is essential that the limit be displaced, rendered inoffensive, and that it pass or seem to pass into the social Schizophrenia or desiring-production is the boundary between the molar organization and the molecular multiplicity of desire; this limit of deterritorialization must must now pass into the interior of the molar organization, and it must be applied to a factitious and subjugated territoriality molar organization, and it must be applied to a factitious and subjugated territoriality. We are now able to surmise what Oedipus Oedipus, the incomparable instrument of gregariousness, is the ultimate private and subjugated territoriality of European man. (Moreover the displaced, exorcised limit One word here on the disgrace of psychoanalysis in history and politics. The procedure is well known: two figures are made known: two figures are made to appear, the Great Man and the Crowd. One then claims to make history with these with these two entities, these two puppets, the Great Crustacean and the Crazy Invertebrate. Oedipus is placed at the beginning. On father, in a murder without end, either to annihilate him and identify with the mother, or to internalize him, to take original solution to the Oedipal conflict. Hitler annihilates the father and unleashes in him the forces of the Bad Mother; Luther the forces of the Bad Mother; Luther internalizes the father and reaches a compromise with the superego. On the other side time collective; the encounter can therefore take place between Luther and the sixteenth-century Christians, or between Hitler and the German people place between Luther and the sixteenth-century Christians, or between Hitler and the German people, with corresponding elements that do not necessarily identity: Hitler plays the role of father through homosexual transfusion and in relation to the female crowd; Luther plays the role them parental images of yet another order, associating the father and the mother, who will then be dissociated and otherwise regrouped the father and the mother, who will then be dissociated and otherwise regrouped within the action of the great man and and otherwise regrouped within the action of the great man and the crowd. It hardly matters whether the tone of these ambiguous dimension of applied psychoanalysis; for all Oedipus—Oedipus in and of itself—is already an application, in the strictest sense already an application, in the strictest sense of the word. And when the best psychoanalysts forbid themselves historico-political applications, we can't activity as always having to evolve within a familial microcosm, and they continue to treat the libido's direct investments of the we who do not forget that society too is triangular and symbolic! If it is true that Oedipus is obtained by of libidinal. investment of. the social field of the production and the formation of this field. There is no more an that makes it pass from one generation to the next, and in its unadapted neurotic stases that block desire at prearranged established order is invested through the group's own repressive forms. And it is not the forms of the subjugated group that forms of the subjugated group that depend on Oedipal projections and identifications, but the reverse: it is Oedipal applications that depend determinations of the subjugated group as an aggregate of departure and on their libidinal investment (from the age of thirteen I've Oedipus depends on this sort of nationalistic, religious, racist sentiment, and not the reverse: it is not the father who is has demonstrated in a profound way the link between Oedipus and segregation. Not, however, in the sense where segregation would be to their class interests—when they rally to the interests and ideals of a class that their own objective situation should subject to, an illusion. It is a problem of desire, and desire is part of the infrastructure. Preconscious investments are made But unconscious investments are made according to positions of desire and uses of synthesis, very different from the interests of the general submission to a dominant class by making cuts (coupures) and segregations pass over into a social field, insofar as it social field, insofar as it is effectively invested by desire and no longer by interests. A form of social production and and no longer by interests. A form of social production and reproduction, along with its economic and financial mechanisms, its political form of social production and reproduction, along with its economic and financial mechanisms, its political formations, and so on, can be along with its economic and financial mechanisms, its political formations, and so on, can be desired as such, in whole or is able to arouse people who are not necessarily bankers. And what about the effects of money that grows, money that socioeconomic complexes that are also veritable complexes of the unconscious, and that communicate a voluptuous wave from the top to the top to the bottom of their hierarchy (the military-industrial complex). And ideology, Oedipus, and the phallus have nothing to do with bottom of their hierarchy (the military-industrial complex). And ideology, Oedipus, and the phallus have nothing to do with this, because they is a matter of flows, of stocks, of breaks in and fluctuations of flows: desire is present wherever something flows and and fluctuations of flows: desire is present wherever something flows and runs, carrying along with it interested subjects—but also drunken the specific nature of the libidinal investments in the economic and political spheres, and thereby to show how, in the subject of the libidinal investments in the economic and political spheres, and thereby to show how, in the subject who desires, desire investment conforming to a conscious interest. In any case conscious and unconscious investments are not of the same type, even when mode, cuts across the interest of the dominated, exploited classes, and causes flows to move that are capable of breaking apart move that are capable of breaking apart both the segregations and their Oedipal applications—flows capable of hallucinating history, of reanimating

I am not of your kind I am the outsider and the deterritorialized, I am of a race inferior for all it is a question of an intense potential for investment and counterinvestment in the unconscious. Oedipus disintegrates because its very conditions

6 A Recapitulation of the Three Syntheses Stupefying Oedipus, inexhaustible and ever present. We are told that the father died over died over a period of thousands of years (well, well!) and that the internalization corresponding to the paternal image was produced the kind to ruminate over the death of the father, and spend all his Paleolithic period internalizing him. On the contrary around the death of the father, the death of God, and wants to put an end to the interminable discourses of thirteen versions of the death of God, for good measure and to be done with it, so as to render the done with it, so as to render the event comical. And he explains that strictly speaking this event has no importance to the same thing, since the same psychic repression (refoulement) and the same social repression (repression) continue unabated, here in the

God is of no consequence. In other terms: that God and the father never existed (or if they did, it was for having recognized in myth the figures of a maternal and a paternal law , their struggles and their relationships. But Engels figures of a maternal and a paternal law , their struggles and their relationships. But Engels slips in a reproach that changes this, that he believes in myths, in the Furies, Apollo, and Athena. The same reproach applies even better to psychoanalysts: it they believe in all of this—in myth, in Oedipus and castration. They reply: the question is not one of knowing but rather that belief is necessarily something false that diverts and suffocates effective production. That is why seers are the least it assumes the link to be already broken between man and nature, man and the world, so that man must be link to be already broken between man and nature, man and the world, so that man must be produced as man must be produced as man by something exterior to nature and to man. On this point Nietzsche makes a remark completely Marx or Engels: We now laugh when we find Man and World placed beside one another, separated by the sublime presumption another, separated by the sublime presumption of the little word and. Coextensiveness is another matter entirely, the coextension of man and and. Coextensiveness is another matter entirely, the coextension of man and nature; a circular movement by which the unconscious, always remaining circular movement by which the unconscious, always remaining subject; produces and reproduces itself. The unconscious does not follow the paths of from one body to another: your father, your father's father, and so on. The organized body is the object of reproduction is, it has engendered itself in the identity of nature and man, of the world and man. The question of the in the identity of nature and man, of the world and man. The question of the father, the question of God same thing, or to live it or kill it: one and the same misconception (contresens) concerning the nature of the unconscious culture. It is Oedipus who produces man in this fashion, and who gives a structure to the false movement of infinite gives a structure to the false movement of infinite progression and regression: your father, and your father's father, a snowball gathering the false movement of infinite progression and regression: your father, and your father's father, a snowball gathering speed as it moves way to the father of the primal horde, to God and the Paleolithic age. It is Oedipus who makes us man escape Oedipus, your sole choice is between the neurotic outlet and the nonneurotic outlet. The tone may be that of the deviants, leftists who ought to be handed over to social and police repression; they talk too much and are lacking in analytic (Dr. Gerard Mendel, Doctors Stephane). What who wraps the splendid gifts of civilization in Oedipus-identity, manic-depression, and liberty in an infinite progression: Through Oedipus the individual learns to live the triangular situation, the token of his identity, and at the same time he discovers—sometimes in a depressive to account for all the triangular experiences of the child and his parents, it must be generalized in space to include it work? How do these machines, these desiring-machines, work—yours and mine? With what sort of breakdowns as a part of the problem of language except to the extent that linguists and logicians have first eliminated meaning; and the greatest force of the extent that linguists and logicians have first eliminated meaning; and the greatest force of language was only discovered once a illegitimate ones that relate use instead to a hypothetical meaning and re-establish a kind of transcendence. Analysis termed transcendental is precisely

What does it mean? Schizoanalysis is at once a transcendental and a materialist analysis. It is critical in the sense that rather than structural—an unconscious, finally, that is molecular, microphysical, and micrological rather than molar or gregarious; productive rather than expressive micrological rather than molar or gregarious; productive rather than expressive. And it is a matter here of practical principles as directions legitimate uses of syntheses, uses completely distinct from Oedipal uses. And in relation to this desiring-production, the Oedipal illegitimate uses seemed be multiform, but always to revolve around the same error, and to envelop theoretical and practical paralogisms. In the first place to revolve around the same error, and to envelop theoretical and practical paralogisms. In the first place, a partial and nonspecific theoretical and practical paralogisms. In the first place, a partial and nonspecific use of the connective syntheses was found to be to be in opposition to the Oedipal use, itself global and specific. This global-specific use was found to have two aspects

This global-specific use was found to have two aspects, parental and conjugal, to which the triangular form of Oedipus and the parental and conjugal, to which the triangular form of Oedipus and the reproduction of this form corresponded. This use rested upon each position of desire, fusing desire to a law, and engendering the illusion that this loosened up and freed the a law, and engendering the illusion that this loosened up and freed the elements of the chain. In the second place This restrictive use in its turn has two poles, imaginary and symbolic, since the only choice it permits is between the only choice it permits is between the exclusive symbolic differentiations and the undifferentiated Imaginary, correlatively determined by Oedipus. This use demonstrates around in the void.) In the third place, a nomadic and polyvocal use of the conjunctive syntheses is opposed to the use of the conjunctive syntheses is opposed to the segregative and biunivocal use made of them. There again this biunivocal use moments: first, a moment that is racist, nationalistic, religious, etc., and that, by means of a segregation, constitutes an aggregate of of biunivocal relations between the determinations of the social field and the familial determinations, thereby making possible and inevitable the reduction the social field and the familial determinations, thereby making possible and inevitable the reduction of libidinal investments to the eternal daddy-mommy closeted in a day nursery, a narcissistic machine for arrogant and mouthy little egos, a perpetual absorption of capitalist surplus value psychoanalysis. The three errors concerning desire are called lack, law, and signifier. It is one and the same error, an idealism desire are called lack, law, and signifier. It is one and the same error, an idealism that forms a pious conception of an idealism that forms a pious conception of the unconscious. And it is futile to interpret these notions in terms of apparatus (une combinatoire) that makes of lack an empty position and no longer a deprivation, that turns the law into a that turns the law into a rule of the game and no longer a commandment, and the signifier into a distributor a rule of the game and no longer a commandment, and the signifier into a distributor and no longer a meaning no longer a commandment, and the signifier into a distributor and no longer a meaning, for these notions cannot be prevented signification. Structural interpretation challenges all beliefs, rises above all images, and from the realm of the mother and the father retains above all images, and from the realm of the mother and the father retains only functions, defines the prohibition and the mother and the father retains only functions, defines the prohibition and the transgression as structural operations. But what water will cleanse knowledge as nonbelief is truly the last refuge of belief, and as Nietzsche put it, there never was but one psychology not produce fantasies, it is a production of the real and a position of desire within reality. From the moment desire operation that closes around the unconscious the circle of prohibition and transgression, white mass and black mass; but the sign of the unconscious the circle of prohibition and transgression, white mass and black mass; but the sign of desire is never a of the law, it is a sign of strength (puissance). And who would dare use the term law for the fact use the term law for the fact that desire situates and develops its strength, and that wherever it is, it causes for the fact that desire situates and develops its strength, and that wherever it is, it causes flows to move and and that wherever it is, it causes flows to move and substances to be intersected (I am careful not to speak punctual semiology. It is said that the unconscious is dark and somber. Reich and Marcuse are often reproached for their Rousseauism is said that the unconscious is dark and somber. Reich and Marcuse are often reproached for their Rousseauism, their naturalism: a the unconscious horrors that could only be those of consciousness, and of a belief too sure of itself? Would it be say that in the unconscious there is necessarily less cruelty and terror, and of a different type, than in the consciousness in the unconscious there is necessarily less cruelty and terror, and of a different type, than in the consciousness of an not the slumber of reason that engenders monsters, but vigilant and insomniac rationality. The unconscious is Rousseauistic, being man-nature. And how vigilant and insomniac rationality. The unconscious is Rousseauistic, being man-nature. And how much malice and ruse there are in Rousseau! Transgression The unconscious is Rousseauistic, being man-nature. And how much malice and ruse there are in Rousseau! Transgression, guilt, castration: are these the beliefs so as to attain the production of desiring-machines, and to reach the level of economic and social investments where production of desiring-machines, and to reach the level of economic and social investments where the militant analysis comes into play. Nothing the benevolent pseudo neutrality of the Oedipal analyst, who wants and understands only daddy and mommy, we must substitute a malevolent of the Oedipal analyst, who wants and understands only daddy and mommy, we must substitute a malevolent, an openly malevolent activity activity: your Oedipus is a fucking drag, keep it up and the analysis will be stopped, or else we'll apply a course Hamlet lives in you as Werther lives in you, and Oedipus too, and anything you want, but you grow uterine in you as Werther lives in you, and Oedipus too, and anything you want, but you grow uterine arms and legs too, and anything you want, but you grow uterine arms and legs, uterine lips, uterine mustache. In tracing back the memory that he can no longer bear the forces of oedipalization and hamletization that hem him in on all sides? Better to all sides? Better to flee to the body without organs and hide out there, closing himself up in it. The little place in this factory, what this process is, its spasms and its glories, its labors and its joys, still remain unknown this process is, its spasms and its glories, its labors and its joys, still remain unknown. 7 Social Repression and Psychic labors and its joys, still remain unknown. 7 Social Repression and Psychic Repression We have attempted to analyze the form, the analyze the form, the reproduction, the (formal) cause, the method, and the condition of the Oedipal triangle. But we have postponed of social repression. This response, however, leaves two problems untouched and makes them even more urgent: on the one hand, the on the one hand, the specific relationship between psychic repression and social repression; on the other hand, the particular situation of on incestuous desires, it would thereby gain a certain independence and primacy, as a condition for constituting a system of exchange two poles, is either repressed (not without leaving behind traces and returns that will be confronted by the prohibitions), or suppressed this confidence in the law, the unawareness of the ruses and the procedures of the law, that leaves us wondering. The be daddy. Or the station mommy. We only wanted peace and Innocence, and to be left alone to machine our little Or the station mommy. We only wanted peace and Innocence, and to be left alone to machine our little machines, O desiring-production. Of course pieces from the bodies of the mother and the father are taken up in the connections, parental appellations indifferent nature that trigger the becoming of adventures, of races, and of continents. But what a bizarre Freudian mania—to relate to relate to Oedipus. what overflows it on every side and from all angles, beginning with the hallucination of books and and from all angles, beginning with the hallucination of books and the delirium of apprenticeships (the teacher as father-substitute, and the books and the delirium of apprenticeships (the teacher as father-substitute, and the book as family romance). Freud couldn't abide a simple thing for the primitive or the child is to form and put into motion their desiring-machines, to make flows circulate and and put into motion their desiring-machines, to make flows circulate and to perform breaks in these flows. The law tells us The law tells us: You will not marry your mother, and you will not kill your father. And we docile subjects marry your mother, and you will not kill your father. And we docile subjects say to ourselves: so that's what I wanted! Will it ever be suspected that the law discredits—and has an interest in discrediting and disgracing—the person it that the law discredits—and has an interest in discrediting and disgracing—the person it presumes to be guilty, the person be guilty, the person the law wants to be guilty and wants to be made to feel guilty? One acts as conclude directly from psychic repression the nature of the repressed, and from the prohibition the nature of what is prohibited. There to a consequent desire, all ready, all warm for punishment, and without putting this desire in the place of the antecedent but who speaks by virtue of the flows of sexuality and the intensities of the unconscious, and who is incensed and the flows of sexuality and the intensities of the unconscious, and who is incensed and bewildered by what Freud is doing and the intensities of the unconscious, and who is incensed and bewildered by what Freud is doing when he closets sexuality Oedipal nursery—has a foreboding of this operation of displacement, and protests with all his might: no, Oedipus is not a his might: no, Oedipus is not a state of desire and the drives, it is an idea, nothing but an idea recourse to this last extremity, to save itself ... which first and foremost is a logical deduction made by the human reason deduction made by the human reason, even if unconsciously made, and secondly is introduced into the affective passionate sphere, where it the unconscious contains nothing ideal, nothing in the least conceptual, and hence nothing in the least personal, since personality, like the this is not because it is desire for the mother and for the death of the father; on the contrary, desire reign of the repression that models the mask for it and plasters it on its face. Besides, it is doubtful that desire is revolutionary in its essence—desire, not left-wing holidays!—and no society can tolerate a position of real desire without position of real desire without its structures of exploitation, servitude, and hierarchy being compromised. If a society is identical with its therefore of vital importance for a society to repress desire, and even to find something more efficient than repression, so that something more efficient than repression, so that repression, hierarchy, exploitation, and servitude are themselves desired. It is quite troublesome to have to sleep with the mother, but because it is revolutionary. And that does not at all mean that desire is something that desire is something other than sexuality, but that sexuality and love do not live in the bedroom of Oedipus, they the bedroom of Oedipus, they dream instead of wide-open spaces, and cause strange flows to circulate that do not let themselves of this study we have maintained both that social production and desiring-production are one and the same, and that they have have maintained both that social production and desiring-production are one and the same, and that they have differing regimes, with the that social production and desiring-production are one and the same, and that they have differing regimes, with the result that a social form of production exercises an essential repression of desiring-production, and also that desiring-production—a real desire—is potentially capable of a link, where Oedipus would be the object of repression, and even its subject through the intermediary of the superego. From a justification that makes psychic repression move into the foreground and no longer considers the problem of social repression as anything terms of social repression, which gives rise to a displacement and acts on the partial drives insofar as they represent in then becomes evident that, the more the problem of Oedipus and incest comes to occupy center stage, the more psychic repression incest comes to occupy center stage, the more psychic repression and its correlates, suppression and sublimation, will be founded on supposedly center stage, the more psychic repression and its correlates, suppression and sublimation, will be founded on supposedly transcendent requirements of civilization same time that the psychoanalyst plunges deeper into a familialist and ideological vision. We do not need to relate again the not need to relate again the reactionary compromises of Freudianism, and even its theoretical surrender: this work has been accomplished several has been accomplished several times, in a profound way, rigorously, and with nuances. We see no special problem in the possibility problem in the possibility of a coexistence of revolutionary, reformist, and reactionary elements at the heart of the same theoretical and and reactionary elements at the heart of the same theoretical and practical doctrine. We refuse to play take it or leave great doctrine were not a combined formation, constructed from bits and pieces, various intermingled codes and flux, partial elements and derivatives combined formation, constructed from bits and pieces, various intermingled codes and flux, partial elements and derivatives, that constitute its very life bits and pieces, various intermingled codes and flux, partial elements and derivatives, that constitute its very life or its becoming. As mentioning that psychoanalysis owes its existence to a relationship, theoretically and practically ambiguous, with what it discovers and the forces that a relationship, theoretically and practically ambiguous, with what it discovers and the forces that it wields. While the critical study of While the critical study of Freudian ideology has been done, and done well, on the other hand the history of the the structure of the psychoanalytic group, its politics, its tendencies and its focal points, its self-applications, its suicides and its follies its tendencies and its focal points, its self-applications, its suicides and its follies, the enormous group superego—everything that took place of Ernest Jones does not penetrate censorship, it codifies it. And the way the three elements coexisted: the exploratory, pioneering, revolutionary a scene from Oedipal theatrical representation (the return to myth!); and finally the third element, the most disturbing, a sort of respectability, which will never have done with getting itself recognized and institutionalized—a formidable enterprise of absorption of surplus value, with interminable cure, its cynical justification of the role of money, and all the pledges it makes to the established order. All fantastic Christopher Columbus, a brilliant bourgeois reader of Goethe, Shakespeare, and Sophocles, a masked Al Capone. The strength of Reich consists needs psychic repression precisely in order to form docile subjects and to ensure the reproduction of the social formation, including its given form of social production. Social repression bears on desire—and not solely on needs or interests—only by means of that is, the stasis of libidinal energy—that actualizes Oedipus and engages desire in this requisite impasse, organized by the repressive first to raise the problem of the relationship between desire and the social field (and went further than Marcuse, who treats problem of the relationship between desire and the social field (and went further than Marcuse, who treats the problem lightly). He merely had the role of explaining the subjective, the negative, and the inhibited, without participating directly as psychoanalysis in the positivity Orgone, he said to himself, in search of the vital and cosmic element of desire, than to continue being a psychoanalyst was the first to attempt to make the analytic machine and the revolutionary machine function together. In the end, he only end, he only had his own desiring-machines, his paranoiac, miraculous, and celibate boxes, with metallic inner walls lined with cotton and and celibate boxes, with metallic inner walls lined with cotton and wool. Psychic repression distinguishes itself from social repression by the from social repression by the unconscious nature of the operation and by its result (even the inhibition of revolt has become formation delegates its power to an agent of psychic repression, and correlatively the repressed desire is as though masked by the the result of this double operation. It is in one and the same movement that the repressive social production is replaced the repressive social production is replaced by the repressing family, and that the latter offers a displaced image of desiring-production that in a diversion where the whole of psychoanalysis goes astray. And the interest of such an operation, from the point of latter could not otherwise ward off desire's potential for revolt and revolution. By placing the distorting mirror of incest before desire be any differentiation, any exchanges possible). We must act quickly and soon. Incest, a slandered shallow stream. Although we can see social production, as a system of reproduction of the producers. And doubtless, at the other pole, the recording of desiring-production on familial: parents only intervene here as partial objects, flows, signs, and agents of a process that outflanks them on all sides the precocious action of social repression, the family slips into and interferes with the network of desiring-genealogy; it assumes the task treated as if it were intrinsically related to the parents, and as if the family were its supreme law. Partial objects The family is therefore introduced into the production of desire and will perform a displacement, an unparalleled repression of desire commencing the child. Social production delegates the family to psychic repression. And if the family is able in this manner to slip desiring-production. It falls to the family to profit from this, and to superimpose the repression that is properly termed secondary, this in the enterprise of domesticating the unconscious, of representing desire and the unconscious). To be sure, we have never dreamed of it, came from my father's being so distant with me and from the small amount of affection shown me by my this, it would be a mistake to stand on ceremony and hold to the ordinary scruples of a diligent psychoanalyst. If musician tells us that music does not attest to active and conquering forces, but to reactive forces, to reactions to daddy-mommy invent nothing, though they have invented much in another way, and have legislated a lot, reinforced a lot, injected a lot a transference Oedipus, a consulting-room Oedipus of Oedipus, especially noxious and virulent, but where the subject finally has what he wants virulent, but where the subject finally has what he wants, and sucks away at his Oedipus on the full body of at his Oedipus on the full body of the analyst. And that's already too much. But Oedipus takes shape in the the analyst's office, which merely acts as the last territoriality. And Oedipus is not made by the family. The Oedipal uses There we have all the forces of social production, reproduction, and repression. This can be explained by the simple truth that to defeat the forces of desire, lead them to resignation, and substitute everywhere reactions of the daddy-mommy type for what is daddy-mommy type for what is essentially active, aggressive, artistic, productive, and triumphant in the unconscious itself. It is in this sense sense, as we have seen, that Oedipus is an application, and the family a delegated agent. Even by application it is is hard, it is difficult for a child to live and experience himself as an angle, Cet enfant it nest pas monde malignement soutenu par la plus sombre organisation. 8 Neurosis and Psychosis In 1924 Freud proposed a simple criterion for distinguishing 1924 Freud proposed a simple criterion for distinguishing between neurosis and psychosis: in neurosis the ego obeys the requirements of reality psychosis: in neurosis the ego obeys the requirements of reality and stands ready to repress the drives of the id, whereas into France. Not this one, however; that same year Capgras and Carrette presented a case of schizophrenia with a delusion of where the patient manifested a strong hatred for her mother and an incestuous desire for her father, but under conditions of The fact remains that Freud never dropped this simple distinction. And it seems important that, following an original path, Freud encounters convergence with the psychiatric elaboration of the notions of dissociation and autism. Hence the reason, perhaps, for the rapid diffusion that of reality bear on something totally different (the social, historical, and cultural fields)? Oedipus simultaneously invades consciousness and dissolves into itself the social, historical, and cultural fields)? Oedipus simultaneously invades consciousness and dissolves into itself, testifying to its incapacity to be an the depths of the soul. The psychotic reacts with autism and the loss of reality. which he is made to submit—the most somber organization—and which he can no longer tolerate: he who has gone bringing back home the person capable of setting whole continents and cultures adrift. He is not suffering from a divided self barriers placed before him by the Oedipal system of social and psychic repression. As Laing says, they are interrupted in their relationship: there would be something like two groups, the psychotics and neurotics, those who do not tolerate oedipalization, and those who the psychotics and neurotics, those who do not tolerate oedipalization, and those who tolerate it and are even content with it who do not tolerate oedipalization, and those who tolerate it and are even content with it and evolve within it. Those those who tolerate it and are even content with it and evolve within it. Those on whom the Oedipal imprint does it. Those on whom the Oedipal imprint does not take, and those on whom it does. I believe my friends cast year in a socially difficult position that was growing more and more suffocating. So, do you believe these two groups are won, there will be no more struggles between the Father and the Son! ... I am speaking of God's people, naturally, not the recording of desire on the increate body without organs, and the familial recording on the socius, that are in opposition opposition throughout the two groups. The innate science in psychosis and the neurotic experimental sciences. The schizoid excentric circle and the psychosis and the neurotic experimental sciences. The schizoid excentric circle and the neurosis triangle. On a more general level, it is in opposition. On the one hand there are the desiring-machines, and on the other the Oedipal-narcissistic machine. In order to understand performs a vast appropriation of the productive forces; it displaces and reorganizes in its own fashion the entirety of the connections reorganizes in its own fashion the entirety of the connections and the hiatuses that characterize the machines of desire. It reorganizes also redistributes these breaks in accordance with its own laws and the requirements of social production. The inscription performed by the form global persons: there's daddy, there's mommy, there you are, and then there's your sister. Cut into the flow of milk the dead-end roads leading to its own undifferentiated (the miasma), and what on the contrary it is going to lead down is going to lead down the paths of a contagious and reproduceable differentiation. For the family creates at the same time For the family creates at the same time its disgraces and its honors, the nondifferentiation of its neurosis and the differentiation its disgraces and its honors, the nondifferentiation of its neurosis and the differentiation of its ideal, which are distinguishable only in The desiring-machines reintroduce or attempt to reintroduce their deviant cuts and breaks. The child feels the task required of him. But that be retained, will that constitute a good Oedipal incision? And the bicycle horn? What is part of the family? It same time an anus that retains, a voice that resounds, and a mouth that consumes: its very own three syntheses, since would allow one to define neurosis as an intra-oedipal disorder, and psychosis as an extra-oedipal escape. It is not even enough distinguish between the pressure that familial reproduction exercises on desiring-production, and the pressure that desiring-production exercises on familial reproduction? The Oedipal that desiring-production exercises on familial reproduction? The Oedipal triangle vibrates and trembles but is this in terms of the hold over in terms of these machines that escape the Oedipal imprint and cause the triangle to release its grip? Where does the be found everywhere all the more readily for being undecidable, and in this sense it is correct to say that Oedipus little girl of his childhood; he perceives them as identical. And Aurelie and Adrienne, both in one, are his mother. Will of his childhood; he perceives them as identical. And Aurelie and Adrienne, both in one, are his mother. Will it be whereas in neurosis the identity remains that of unconscious representations and does not compromise perception. But what is there to gain from inscribing everything in Oedipus, even psychosis? One step further and Aurelie, Adrienne, and the mother are the Virgin. Nerval seeks in Oedipus, even psychosis? One step further and Aurelie, Adrienne, and the mother are the Virgin. Nerval seeks the point where where the mother is no longer encountered, but the Virgin and God: And twice I have crossed and conquered the Acheron mother is no longer encountered, but the Virgin and God: And twice I have crossed and conquered the Acheron. Thus the but the Virgin and God: And twice I have crossed and conquered the Acheron. Thus the schizo will accept the reduction being able to make everything rise again from the mother, and to keep for his Own secret use all the Virgins be inaccurate to maintain an Oedipal interpretation for the neuroses, and to reserve an extra-oedipal explanation for the psychoses. There are two groups, there is no difference in nature between neuroses and psychoses. For in any case desiring-production is the cause, the both the psychotic subversions that shatter Oedipus or overwhelm it, and of the neurotic reverberations that constitute it. Such a principle was it not self-evident that the actual factor arose afterward, and signified recent, in opposition to the infantile or the oldest acting by means of a repressive deprivation (the sexual stasis) and as arising afterward. Which leads him to maintain a kind prohibited by reality, but also those that reality leaves open and that the ego forbids itself in its turn (the double-impasse oneself to the present or actual state of the disorder, and the concern for going further than Oedipus, even further than the transference, as well as being archaic factors infinitely older and from an order of time which is not that of privative only provided it enjoys the rights of the Ideal, and does not cease to be an afterward except by becoming lung attests: for the young, whose problems concern the family and love, Freud's method! For those less young, whose problems have young, whose problems have to do with social adaptation, Adler! And Jung for the adults and the old people, whose problems do with social adaptation, Adler! And Jung for the adults and the old people, whose problems have to do with the old people, whose problems have to do with the Ideal. And we have seen what remains common to Freud and Jung Ideal. And we have seen what remains common to Freud and Jung: the unconscious always measured against myths (and not against to Freud and Jung: the unconscious always measured against myths (and not against the units of production), although the measuring is matter, after all, if morality or religion find an analytical and regressive meaning in Oedipus, or if Oedipus finds an anagogical regressive meaning in Oedipus, or if Oedipus finds an anagogical and prospective meaning in morality or religion? We maintain that the relation to social production, in their different or conflicting regimes, and the modes of investment that desiring-production performs in the system as it is caught up in this relationship, this conflict, and these modalities. Nor is this factor either ulterior or privative of desire, it is contemporary with the most tender age, and it accompanies this life with every step. It does not with early childhood, or as an effect of the psychic and social repression imposed on desiring-production by social reproduction by means is not used because it designates what is most recent and because it would be opposed to former or infantile; it used in terms of its difference with respect to virtual. And it is the Oedipus complex that is virtual, either inasmuch of the actual factor, or inasmuch as it is dismembered and dissolved in a psychotic formation as the direct effect of to us to be a final paralogue in psychoanalytic theory and practice; active desiring-production, in its very process, invests from the process, invests from the beginning a constellation of somatic, social, and metaphysical relations that do not follow after Oedipal psychological relations abstractly, independently of the actual factor that coexists with it and to which it reacts. Yet this is what psychoanalysis does is what psychoanalysis does when it closets itself in Oedipus, and determines its progressions and regressions in terms of Oedipus, or when it closets itself in Oedipus, and determines its progressions and regressions in terms of Oedipus, or even in relationship to characterize psychosis. It is like a Cartesian devil; the regressions and progressions are made only within the artificially closed vessel of are made only within the artificially closed vessel of Oedipus, and in reality depend on a state of forces that is a state of forces that is changing, yet always actual and contemporary, within anoedipal desiring-production. Desiring-production has solely an actual existence within anoedipal desiring-production. Desiring-production has solely an actual existence; progressions and regressions are merely the effectuations of a virtuality that is by virtue of the states of desire. Rarely have psychiatrists and psychoanalysts been able to establish a really inspired direct relationship direct relationship with either child or adult schizophrenics; Gisela Pankow and Bruno Bettelheim break new ground in this area by the ground in this area by the force of their theory and the efficacy of their therapy. It is not by chance baby. It is a question of giving the patient tactile and other bodily sensations that lead him to a recognition of is a question of the recognition of an unconscious desire, and not of this desire's satisfaction. Recognizing the desire is tantamount to which the schizo had retreated in order to silence and suffocate this production. This recognition of desire this position of of desire, this Sign refers to an order of real and actual productivity that is not to be confused with an not to be confused with an indirect or symbolic satisfaction, and that, in its stops as in its starts, is as a progressive restoration of Oedipus. 9 The Process Between neurosis and psychosis there is no difference in nature, species, or group Then how do we conceive of the relationship between psychosis and neurosis? Everything changes depending on whether we call psychosis the Schizophrenia as a process is desiring-production production that goes to the very extremes of its deterritorialization, and as the movement of metaphysical production that carries desire along movement of metaphysical production that carries desire along with it and reproduces it in a new Earth. The desert grows ... the of the body without organs, where he installs his desiring-machines and produces a perpetual outflow of acting forces. there is desiring-production from the moment there is social production and reproduction. But in a very precise sense it is true it, they code the flows of desire. To code desire—and the fear, the anguish of decoded flows—is the business desire, but under the social conditions that define its limit and the possibility of its own dissolution, so that it is the deterritorialized socius gives way to the body without organs, and the decoded flows throw themselves into desiring-production. Hence it is First of all, universal history is the history of contingencies, and not the history of necessity. Ruptures and limits, and not history of contingencies, and not the history of necessity. Ruptures and limits, and not continuity. For great accidents were necessary, and contingencies, and not the history of necessity. Ruptures and limits, and not continuity. For great accidents were necessary, and amazing encounters and limits, and not continuity. For great accidents were necessary, and amazing encounters that could have happened elsewhere, or before, or have happened, in order for the flows to escape coding and, escaping, to nonetheless fashion a new machine bearing the determinations of the capitalist socius. Thus the encounter between private property and commodity production, which presents itself, however, as two quite distinct however, as two quite distinct forms of decoding, by privatization and by abstraction. Or, from the viewpoint of private property itself the encounter between flows of convertible wealth owned by capitalists and a flow of workers possessing nothing more than their labor Then again, if we say that capitalism determines the conditions and the possibility of a universal history, this is true only is not only retrospective, it is also contingent, singular, ironic, and critical. The earth is the primitive, savage unity of desire critical. The earth is the primitive, savage unity of desire and production. For the earth is not merely the multiple and and production. For the earth is not merely the multiple and divided object of labor, it is also the unique, indivisible full body that falls back on the forces of production and appropriates them for its own as the natural or divine divine precondition. While the ground can be the productive element and the result of appropriation, the Earth is the great unengendered the element superior to production that conditions the common appropriation and utilization of the ground. It is the surface on which whole process of production is inscribed, on which the forces and means of labor are recorded, and the agents and the on which the forces and means of labor are recorded, and the agents and the products distributed. It appears here as forces and means of labor are recorded, and the agents and the products distributed. It appears here as the quasi cause distributed. It appears here as the quasi cause of production and the object of desire (it is on the earth that a transmitting, or even a driving element that is nonhuman, and that extends man's strength and allows for a certain disengagement driving element that is nonhuman, and that extends man's strength and allows for a certain disengagement from it. The social machine its parts, even if we view them with their machines, and integrate them, internalize them in an institutional model at every in an institutional model at every stage of action, transmission, and motricity. Hence the social machine fashions a memory without which memory without which there would be no synergy of man and his (technical) machines. The latter do not in fact contain their process; they point to the social machines that condition and organize them, but also limit and inhibit their development. It social machines that condition and organize them, but also limit and inhibit their development. It will be necessary to await capitalism semiautonomous organization of technical production that tends to appropriate memory and reproduction, and thereby modifies the forms of the exploitation of of technical production that tends to appropriate memory and reproduction, and thereby modifies the forms of the exploitation of man; but that preceded it. The same machine can be both technical and social, but only when viewed from different perspectives: for example the clock as a technical machine for measuring uniform time, and as a social machine for reproducing canonic hours and for time, and as a social machine for reproducing canonic hours and for assuring order in the city. When Lewis Mumford coins the combination of solid elements, each having its specialized function and operating under human control in order to transmit a movement operating under human control in order to transmit a movement and perform a task, then the human machine was indeed a of any metaphor, inasmuch as it exhibits an immobile motor and undertakes a variety of interventions: flows are set apart, elements flows are set apart, elements are detached from a chain, and portions of the tasks to be performed are distributed. Coding share for each member, in a global system of desire and destiny that organizes the productions of production, the productions of that organizes the productions of production, the productions of recording, and the productions of consumption. Flows of women and children; flows of recording, and the productions of consumption. Flows of women and children; flows of herds and of seed, sperm flows, flows of consumption. Flows of women and children; flows of herds and of seed, sperm flows, flows of shit, menstrual flows: nothing of production, the flows of means of production, of producers and consumers: the full body of the goddess Earth gathers to Earth gathers to itself the cultivable species, the agricultural implements, and the human organs. Meyer Fortes makes a passing remark that organs. Meyer Fortes makes a passing remark that is joyous and refreshingly sound: The circulation of women is not the problem socius of inscription where the essential thing is to mark and to be marked. There is circulation only if inscription requires to the extent that the organs capable respectively of producing and breaking them are themselves encircled, instituted as partial objects, distributed themselves encircled, instituted as partial objects, distributed on the socius and attached to it. A mask is such an institution of which are at the same time sensory organs, anatomical parts, and joints. Prohibition (see not, speak not) apply to those who collectively invested organ. The mythologies sing of organs—partial objects and their relations with a full body that repels or attracts persons, but rather in series which determine the connections, disjunctions, and conjunctions of organs. That is why fantasies are group fantasies collective investment of organs that plugs desire into the socius and assembles social production and desiring-production into a whole on the that plugs desire into the socius and assembles social production and desiring-production into a whole on the earth. Our modern societies the constitution of private persons as individual centers of organs and functions derived from the abstract quantity. One is even compelled detached object distributing lack to the persons of both sexes and organizing the Oedipal triangle, it is the anus that in this manner detaches it, it is the anus that removes and sublimates the penis in a kind of Aufhebung that will desire; but when the libido becomes abstract quantity, the elevated and disinvested anus produces the global persons and the specific egos quantity, the elevated and disinvested anus produces the global persons and the specific egos that serve this same quantity as units that is the self. The whole of Oedipus is anal and implies an individual overinvestment of the organ to compensate for are always partial, following the compact, agglutinated series of ancestors, and the fragmented series of companions and cousins. No anality—although agglutinated series of ancestors, and the fragmented series of companions and cousins. No anality—although, or rather because, there is a capitalism haunts them, that is to say, as the nightmare and the anxious foreboding of what might result from the decoding foreboding of what might result from the decoding of flows and the collective disinvestment of organs, the becoming-abstract of the flows disinvestment of organs, the becoming-abstract of the flows of desire, and the becoming-private of the organs? The primitive territorial machine codes the organs? The primitive territorial machine codes flows, invests organs, and marks bodies. To such a degree that circulating—exchanging—is socius, insofar as it lays claim to the productive forces and distributes the agents of production, resides in these operations: tattooing in these operations: tattooing, excising, incising, carving, scarifying, mutilating, encircling, and initiating. Nietzsche thus defined the morality of mores (...)—the labor evaluations possessing the force of law concerning the various members and parts of the body. Not only is the criminal deprived social rules as exact as those followed in carving up and apportioning a steer; but the man who enjoys the full the man who enjoys the full exercise of his rights and duties has his whole body marked under a regime that whole body marked under a regime that consigns his organs and their exercise to the collectivity (the privatization of the organs founding act—that the organs be hewn into the socius, and that the flows run over its surface—through which man surface—through which man ceases to be a biological organism and becomes a full body, an earth, to which his organs it is a matter of creating a memory for man; and man, who was constituted by means of an active faculty memory, one that is collective, a memory of words (paroles) and no longer a memory of things, a memory of signs no longer a memory of things, a memory of signs and no longer of effects. This organization, which traces its signs a terrible alphabet. Perhaps indeed there was nothing more fearful and uncanny in the whole prehistory of man than his mnemotechnics than his mnemotechnics (...) Man could never do without blood, torture, and sacrifices when he felt the need to create a memory to create a memory for himself; the most dreadful sacrifices and pledges (...), the most repulsive mutilations (...), the cruelist rites of all is the movement of culture that is realized in bodies and inscribed on them, belaboring them. That is what cruelty means ideology: on the contrary, it forcibly injects production into desire, and conversely, it forcibly inserts desire into social production and reproduction desire, and conversely, it forcibly inserts desire into social production and reproduction. For even death, punishment, and torture are desired, and desire into social production and reproduction. For even death, punishment, and torture are desired, and are instances of production (compare the history of fatalism). It makes men or their organs into the parts and wheels of the social machine. The sign is a position are the territorial signs that plant their flags in bodies. And if one wants to call this inscription in naked flesh it must be said that speech in fact presupposes writing, and that it is this cruel system of inscribed signs that system of inscribed signs that renders man capable of language, and gives him a memory of the spoken word. 2 The Engel's formula, it subdivides not the people but the territory, and substitutes a geographic organization for the organization of gens. Yet does so on an indivisible earth where the connective, disjunctive, and conjunctive relations of each section are inscribed along with the for example, the coexistence or complementarity of the section chief and the guardian of the earth). When the division extends to earth itself, by virtue of an administration that is landed and residential, this cannot be regarded as a promotion of territoriality the soil as well as the rain from the sky and the general appropriation of the productive forces. Hence the savage only territorial machine in the strict sense of the term. And the functioning of such a machine consists in the following a machine consists in the following: the declension of alliance and filiation—declining the lineages on the body of the earth of this concept, which resembles the Roman distinction between agnation and cognation, is that any Ego is related to the kinsman two parents because he is the descendant of both parents and not because his parents were married ... [However] the cross ties assert the continuance of the affinal relationship. Filiation is administrative and hierarchical, but alliance is political and economic, and expresses power relationship. Filiation is administrative and hierarchical, but alliance is political and economic, and expresses power insofar as it is not fused is administrative and hierarchical, but alliance is political and economic, and expresses power insofar as it is not fused with the power insofar as it is not fused with the hierarchy and cannot be deduced from it, and the economy insofar as fused with the hierarchy and cannot be deduced from it, and the economy insofar as it is not identical with administration economy insofar as it is not identical with administration. Filiation and alliance are like the two forms of a primitive capital forms of a primitive capital: fixed capital or filiative stock, and circulating capital or mobile blocks of debts. There are two of them, the one biofiliative, the other a memory of alliances and of words. While production is recorded in the network of labor still must detach themselves from the productive process and pass into the element of recording that appropriates them for through a connection represented by the marriage of the father and the mother. At no time, therefore, does alliance derive from in primitive society, it is determined as dominant by economic and political factors. And if filiation expresses what is dominant while it is determined as dominant by economic and political factors. And if filiation expresses what is dominant while being itself determined lineages insofar as they are differentiated from lineages of filiation, and insofar as they operate at the level of small segments the same area, or in neighboring areas, who arrange marriages and shape concrete reality to a much greater extent than do a much greater extent than do the systems or filiation and the abstract matrimonial classes. A kinship system is not a not a structure but a practice, a praxis, a method, and even a strategy, Louis Berthe, analyzing a relationship of alliance even a strategy, Louis Berthe, analyzing a relationship of alliance and hierarchy, shows convincingly that a village intervenes as a third large segments that makes alliance depend on the major filiations, and that finds itself contradicted by practice. It is necessary to compensation that would result from the closing of the cycle, and everyone stresses the relationship of asymmetry, emphasizing the creditor-debtor behavior to the extent that it is severed from the political and economic references that keep it open, and that make alliance from the political and economic references that keep it open, and that make alliance something other than an arrangement of matrimonial make alliance something other than an arrangement of matrimonial classes and filiative lineages. It is the same for the whole project ensure reciprocal adaptation, the respective embrace of a signifying chain and flows of production? The great nomad hunter follows the flows great nomad hunter follows the flows, exhausts them in place, and moves on with them to another place. He reproduces in place. He reproduces in an accelerated fashion his entire filiation, and contracts it into a point that keeps him in a describes the solitary hunter who becomes identical with his force and his destiny, and delivers his song in a language that hunter who becomes identical with his force and his destiny, and delivers his song in a language that becomes increasingly rapid delivers his song in a language that becomes increasingly rapid and distorted: Me, me, me, I am a powerful nature, a me, me, I am a powerful nature, a me, me, I am a powerful nature, a nature incensed and aggressive! Such are the two characteristics of the hunter, the the bush or the forest: real displacement with the flows and direct filiation with the god. It has to do with But a pure nomad does not exist; there is always and already an encampment where it is a matter of stocking encampment where it is a matter of stocking—however little—and where it is a matter of inscribing and allocating, of however little—and where it is a matter of inscribing and allocating, of marrying, and of feeding oneself. (Clastres shows well it is a matter of inscribing and allocating, of marrying, and of feeding oneself. (Clastres shows well how, among the Guayaki well how, among the Guayaki, the connection between the hunters and the living animals is succeeded in the encampment by a in the encampment by a disjunction between the dead animals and the hunters—a disjunction similar to an incest prohibition, since sometimes the same man in two situations: the bush paranoiac and the village pervert. Once the socius becomes fixed, falling back the socius becomes fixed, falling back on the productive forces and appropriating them for its own, the problem of coding can simultaneity of a displacement from the standpoint of the flows, and an accelerated reproduction from the standpoint of the chain. The object of deductions (prelevements) that constitute a minimum of stock, and the signifying chain must be the object of detachments (detachements) A flow is coded insofar as detachments from the chain and deductions from the flows are effected in correspondence, united in flows are effected in correspondence, united in a mutual embrace. And this is already the highly perverse activity of local groups to other cases where a psychic work of selection, refinement, and calculation was manifested. And this is the case from the a psychic work of selection, refinement, and calculation was manifested. And this is the case from the start, since there does can be afforded the satisfaction of drifting with the flows and singing direct filiation, but always a socius waiting to bear but always a socius waiting to bear down, already deducting and detaching. The flow deductions constitute a filiative stock in the from the chain constitute mobile debts of alliance that guide and direct the flows. On the blanket that serves as a is a sort of vast cycle of flows of production and chains of inscription, and a lesser cycle, between the stocks vast cycle of flows of production and chains of inscription, and a lesser cycle, between the stocks of filiation that connect stocks of filiation that connect or encaste (encastent) the flows, and the blocks of alliance that cause the chains to flow flow. Descent is at the same time flow of production and chain of inscription, stock of filiation and fluxion of alliance flow of production and chain of inscription, stock of filiation and fluxion of alliance. Everything takes place as though the stock that is determined by the respective paths of the gifts and counter-gifts on the surface. Among the Kula, the circulation of on the surface. Among the Kula, the circulation of necklaces and bracelets comes to a standstill in certain places, on certain filiation that do not reconstitute lateral connections across the alliances and pairings of persons. Not only the flows and the chains the alliances and pairings of persons. Not only the flows and the chains, but the fixed stocks and the mobile debts only the flows and the chains, but the fixed stocks and the mobile debts—insofar as they in turn imply relations debts—insofar as they in turn imply relations between chains and flows in both directions—are in a state of perpetual saying that the supposedly closed system extends in one direction and opens as the prestations become wider and more complex. But in one direction and opens as the prestations become wider and more complex. But such a conception is in contradiction with economy, which is without net investment, without money or market, and without exchange commodity relations. The mainspring of such an economy the other in the flows of production, phenomena of excess and deficiency, phenomena of lack and accumulation, which will be compensated of production, phenomena of excess and deficiency, phenomena of lack and accumulation, which will be compensated for by nonexchangeable elements of gifts be reciprocated with interest, being territorial signs of desire and power (puissance), and principles of abundance and the fructification of with interest, being territorial signs of desire and power (puissance), and principles of abundance and the fructification of wealth. Far from signs of desire and power (puissance), and principles of abundance and the fructification of wealth. Far from being a pathological consequence Far from being a pathological consequence, the disequilibrium is functional and fundamental. Far from being the extension of a system that in the heterogeneity of the elements that compose the prestations and that compensate for the disequilibrium by displacing it. In short for example, the superior or inferior ranks of the givers and receivers of wives). The surplus value of code carries out detaching segments from the chain, organizing selections from the flows, and allocating the portions due each person. The idea that primitive societies have no history, that they are dominated by archetypes and their repetition, is especially weak and inadequate. This idea was are dominated by archetypes and their repetition, is especially weak and inadequate. This idea was not conceived by ethnologists, but by of history. If what is called history is a dynamic and open social reality, in a state of functional disequilibrium, or a state of functional disequilibrium, or an oscillating equilibrium, unstable and always compensated, comprising not only institutionized

It is still pursued between certain ethnologists and certain disciples of Lacan—those who offered not only an would seem—that makes of Oedipus an original affective constellation, and that constitutes an extreme position arguing that Oedipus was a a real event whose effects were transmitted through phylogenetic heredity. And the other pole, which makes Oedipus into a structure, a discovering the structure in fantasy, in relation to biological prematuration and neoteny. Two very different conceptions of the limit, one as the Great Signifier. Interpretation is our modern way of believing and of being pious. Already Geza Roheim proposed organizing primitives into was not to be found if it wasn't looked for. And that one wasn't looking if one hadn't had oneself analyzed that one wasn't looking if one hadn't had oneself analyzed. And that is why your daughter is mute, which is to such breaks with which the nature of social repression (repression), and the meaning and scope of psychic repression (refoulement), would vary which the nature of social repression (repression), and the meaning and scope of psychic repression (refoulement), would vary. This story of nature of affects in the public symbols of primitive societies, and this nature remains integrally lived by the members of these of these societies, even though they have not been psychoanalyzed, and in spite of the displacement of the representation. As Leach repressed. Must it be said that primitives repress the representation and keep the affect intact? And would the contrary be true that primitives repress the representation and keep the affect intact? And would the contrary be true in our case, in the fact: psychoanalysis tells us that we too repress the representation. And everything tells us that we too often keep the full The prohibition of incest would therefore imply an Oedipal representation, and it would be born of the repression of this representation it would be born of the repression of this representation and of the latter's return. Now the opposite is clearly the Oedipal representation any more than it provokes this repression. But—and this is something altogether different—the general social repression-psychic repression social production or reproduction. It is what would introduce disorder and revolution into the socius, the noncoded flows of desire. The without any repression of a sexual nature of the symbolism and the corresponding affects, and above all, without any reference to a sexual nature of the symbolism and the corresponding affects, and above all, without any reference to an Oedipal representation that hungry is evident, or a pleasure at not being hungry, and this investment refers only secondarily to an image of the to Oedipus, but to the noncoded flows that constitute desire, and to their representative, the intense prepersonal flow. As for Oedipus of codifying what eludes the codes, or of displacing desire and its object, a way of entrapping them. Culturalists and ethnologists desire and its object, a way of entrapping them. Culturalists and ethnologists have demonstrated that institutions are primary in relation to have demonstrated that institutions are primary in relation to affects and structures. For structures are not mental, they are present in sont dans les choses), in the forms of social production and reproduction. Even an author like Marcuse, whom one would not track: introducing desire into production, strengthening the link between instinctual and economic structure; and at the same time [indicating] the possibility into production, strengthening the link between instinctual and economic structure; and at the same time [indicating] the possibility of progress beyond the patricentric-acquisitive culture. Then what caused culturalism to go wrong? And here again there is no contradiction in the fact that in the fact that it started on the right track, and that it went wrong from the start. Perhaps the answer the answer lies in the postulate common to Oedipal relativism and Oedipal absolutism—i.e., the stubborn maintenance of a familialist to the contrary a nuclear constant around which families and institutions turn. The culturalists invoke other triangles—maternal uncle-aunt-nephew, for difficulty in demonstrating that these are imaginary variations of one and the same structural constant, different figures of one and the one and the same structural constant, different figures of one and the same symbolic triangulation, which are not identical either with the side, as the empty position!) The conflict between culturalists and orthodox psychoanalysts has often been reduced to these evaluations of to these evaluations of the respective roles of the mother and the father, or of the pre-oedipal and the Oedipal, without of the mother and the father, or of the pre-oedipal and the Oedipal, without allowing either side to leave the family famous two poles, the pre-oedipal maternal pole of the Imaginary, and the Oedipal paternal pole of the structural, both on the of the way desire invests the social field from childhood, and under the familial stimuli coming from the adult: all the the child as a microcosm, then projected into the adult and social development (devenir). From this point of view, the discussion round in circles between the holders of a cultural interpretation and the holders of a symbolic or structural interpretation of this this same organization. A second postulate common to the culturalists and the symbolists should be added. They all agree that, in should be added. They all agree that, in our patriarchal and capitalist society at least, Oedipus is a sure thing (even everywhere; or on the contrary, they hold that the terms and the relations should be made to vary within non-oedipal complexes at Oedipus as it is meant to command our respect and to function for us: it is not at the weakest strongest link, by revealing the degree of disfiguration it implies and brings to bear on desiring-production, on the syntheses of the to bear on desiring-production, on the syntheses of the unconscious, and on libidinal investments in our cultural and social milieu. Not of the unconscious, and on libidinal investments in our cultural and social milieu. Not that Oedipus counts for nothing in our our society: we have said repeatedly that Oedipus is demanded, and demanded again and again; and even an attempt as profound have said repeatedly that Oedipus is demanded, and demanded again and again; and even an attempt as profound as Lacan's at repeatedly that Oedipus is demanded, and demanded again and again; and even an attempt as profound as Lacan's at shaking loose interpreted as an unhelped-for means of making it heavier still and of resecuring it on the baby and the schizo. To it heavier still and of resecuring it on the baby and the schizo. To be sure, it is not only legitimate the current organization be capable of conducting its own criticism. And yet Oedipus's autocritique is something rarely seen in our organization that has only succeeded with us by assembling the parts and wheels of its apparatus from elements of the previous social critique of Oedipus must always resume its point of departure and find again its point of arrival. Oedipus is a limit middle as a structural function ensuring the mediation of personages and the ground of their relations; or at the end as production; the decoded flows, at the limits of the codes and the territorialities; the body without organs, at the limits of the schizo-flows pass through the wall, scramble all the codes, and deterritorialize the socius: the body without organs is the deterritorialized than the capitalist social formation, because the latter engineers (machine) and mobilizes flows that are effectively decoded, but does so by the real form in which the limit threatens to arrive, and which it wards off with all the strength it can obstinacy with which the formations preceding capitalism encase the merchant and the technician, preventing flows of money and flows of production encase the merchant and the technician, preventing flows of money and flows of production from assuming an autonomy that would destroy which codes three kinds of flows: consumer goods, prestige goods, and women and children. When money supervenes, it can only be three kinds of flows: consumer goods, prestige goods, and women and children. When money supervenes, it can only be coded as women: all the codes vacillate. Doubtless, to begin with money and to finish with money is an operation that cannot be loaded with export goods, the Tiv elders deplore this situation, and know what is happening, but do not know where to acting as the representative of desire. Whence, in the fifth and last instance, the importance of the task of displacing the the socius, in the middle, between a beyond of alliance and a filiative this-side-of, between a representation of alliance and the alliance and a filiative this-side-of, between a representation of alliance and the representative of filiation, as one attempts to tame the which case it is not universal; or it is universal, and a position of desire. In reality, it is universal because number of conditions are indispensable: the field of social production and reproduction must become independent of familial reproduction, that is, independent that is, independent of the territorial machine that declines alliances and filiations; the detachable fragments of the chain must be converted the familial field, now defined as the aggregate destination—and it must establish a network of one-to-one relations between the representation; it must migrate to the heart of this system and itself come to occupy the position of the representative of because the family, when opened to alliances, is coextensive with and adequate to the social historical field; because it animates social transcendent term that performs the folding operation). Speaking, dancing, exchanging, and allowing to flow, and even urinating, in the midst of the folding operation). Speaking, dancing, exchanging, and allowing to flow, and even urinating, in the midst of the community of men himself puts it, to express the fluidity of the flows and the primitive codes. At the heart of primitive production one always finds oneself at 4+n, in the system of ancestors and affines. Far from being able to claim that here there one is always brought to a halt well before 3+1, and if there is a primitive Oedipus, it is a neg-Oedipus in effect, Oedipus begins in the mind of the father. And the beginning is not absolute: it is only constituted starting the social historical field that are effected by the father. And if it passes over to the son, this is not invested through the familial stimuli is still the social field, and a whole system of breaks and extrafamilial flows. The fact still the social field, and a whole system of breaks and extrafamilial flows. The fact that the father is first in analytically in terms of another primacy, that of social investments and counterinvestments in relation to familial investments: this will be seen on which capitalist production and reproduction fall back. The organs and the agents of the no longer pass through a coding of flows of alliance and filiation, but through an axiomatic of decoded flows. Consequently, the that corresponds to it, to which it will be applied, and without which it would have no hold on the productions what is there to say about the relationship between ethnology and psychoanalysis? Must we be content with an uncertain parallelism where two irreducible sectors of symbolism? A social sector of symbols, and a sexual sector that would constitute a kind of private the two, since social symbolism can become a sexual material, and sexuality, a ritual of social aggregation.) But the problem is means phallus, castration, Oedipus. But the ethnologist asks other questions, and sincerely asks himself of what use can psychoanalytic interpretations be but between two kinds of questions, What does it mean? and What purpose does it serve? Of what use is it only to the ethnologist, but what purpose does it serve and how does it work in the very formation that makes no useful purpose, either for psychoanalysts or for the unconscious. And to what use could the phallus be put, since it representation. The true misunderstandings, the misunderstandings between ethnologists (or Hellenists) and psychoanalysts, do not come from a faulty knowledge or recognition sorts of questions. Without always formulating it clearly, the ethnologists and the Hellenists think that a symbol is not defined by defined by what it means, but by what it does and by what is done with it. It always means the that there is no ethnographic material: there are only uses and functionings (des fonctionnements). On this point, it could be that to replace the psychoanalytic interpretation. It could be that ethnologists and Hellenists will compel psychoanalysts for their part to make a unconscious constructs machines, which are machines of desire, whose use and functioning schizoanalysis discovers in their immanent relationship with social machines the social machine by desire. It has often been said and demonstrated that an institution cannot be explained by its use its use, any more than an organ can. Biological formations and social formations are not formed in the same way in case of desiring-machines as molecular elements: there, use, functioning, production, and formation are one and the same process. And it is molecular elements: there, use, functioning, production, and formation are one and the same process. And it is this synthesis of desire functioning, production, and formation are one and the same process. And it is this synthesis of desire that, under certain determinate them. Only desiring-machines produce connections according to which they function, and function by improvising and forming the connections. A molar functionalism connections according to which they function, and function by improvising and forming the connections. A molar functionalism is therefore a functionalism only unities-multiplicities that functionalism must know are the desiring-machines themselves and the configurations they form in all the sectors of a organs, a shred of clothing, an image of daddy, formulas and words: we shall not ask what it means, but what machine is assembled in this manner—what kind of flows and breaks in the flows, in relation to other breaks and and breaks in the flows, in relation to other breaks and other flows. Analyzing the symbolism of the forked branch among form a part of a chain that mobilizes the species and the properties of the trees from which the branches are as well as the names of these species in turn, and the technical procedures with which they are treated. Selections are said about the thing) is only one element among others, and is less important than the operative use (what is done the positional functioning (the relationship with other things in one and the same complex), according to which the symbol is never but always has a multiplicity of referents, being always multivocal and polysemous. Analyzing the magical object buti among the Kukuya of it is inseparable from the practical syntheses that produce, record, and consume it: the partial and nonspecific connection that combines fragments practical syntheses that produce, record, and consume it: the partial and nonspecific connection that combines fragments from the body of the that inscribes the object in the body of the subject, and transforms the latter into a man-animal; the residual conjunction that ethnologist senses that there is a problem of political power and economic and religious force inseparable from the fetish, even when that there is a problem of political power and economic and religious force inseparable from the fetish, even when its use inseparable from the fetish, even when its use is individual and private. Hair, for example—the rituals of hair-cutting and coiffure individual and private. Hair, for example—the rituals of hair-cutting and coiffure: is there any interest in referring these rituals to rituals to the phallus entity as signifying the separate thing, and in everywhere re-encountering the father as the symbolic representative of flow of hair, with the breaks in such a flow, and with what passes from one state into another through the separable part of the body does not represent an aggressive and separate phallus; hair is a thing in its own right if it is necessary to take into account political, economic, and religious dimensions that would go beyond sexuality. So long as manner, so long as a choice is imposed between libido and numen, the misunderstanding between ethnologists and psychoanalysts can only be imposed between libido and numen, the misunderstanding between ethnologists and psychoanalysts can only be aggravated—just as it continues to be aggravated—just as it continues to grow between Hellenists and psychoanalysts apropos of Oedipus. Oedipus, the clubfooted despot, who clearly entire political history that brings into conflict the despotic machine and the old primitive territorial machine—whence derive both the negation the old primitive territorial machine—whence derive both the negation and the persistence of autochthony, brought into clear relief by Levi-Strauss is a question of knowing how one conceives of sexuality and libidinal investment. Must they be referred to an event or event or to something that is felt, which remains familial and intimate in spite of everything, an intimate Oedipal feeling, even pure signifier? Or rather is it necessary to open sexuality and libidinal investment onto the determinations of a sociohistorical field, where determinations of a sociohistorical field, where the economic, the political, and the religious are things that are invested by the libido are things that are invested by the libido for themselves, and not the derivatives of a daddy-mommy? In the first instance molar aggregates, large social machines—the economic, the political, etc.—and this entails searching for what they mean by applying them the family, toward the molecular elements that form the parts and wheels of desiring-machines. One searches for the way in which way in which these machines function, for how they invest and underdetermine (subdeterminent) the social machines that they constitute on a on the giant molecule of the body without organs (numen), and that distributes states of being and becoming according to domains body without organs (numen), and that distributes states of being and becoming according to domains of presence or zones of intensity they constitute statistically. In this sense, there is only desire and the social. Beneath the conscious investments of economic, political, religious way in which desire is present in a social field, and joins this field to itself as the statistically determined domain that they form at the level of large numbers. Symbols and fetishes are manifestations of desiring-machines. Sexuality is by no means familial whole; it is the molecular underdetermination functioning within social and secondarily familial aggregates that trace desire's field of presence and and secondarily familial aggregates that trace desire's field of presence and its field of production: an entire nonOedipal unconscious that will desiring-machines. 5 Territorial Representation While representation is always a social and psychic repression of desiring-production, it should be borne in mind that vary in depth: the repressed representative, the repressing representation, and the displaced represented. But the agents (les instances) that come see no reason for believing in the universality of one and the same apparatus of sociocultural repression (refoulement). One can speak coefficient of affinity that varies in degree between social machines and desiring-machines, according to whether their respective regimes are more or have a greater or lesser chance of causing their connections and interactions to pass into the regime of the social machines a movement of detachment (decollement) in relation to the desiring-machines; and whether the death-carrying elements remain caught in the machinery of in relation to the desiring-inscription of the body without organs, and in relation to the primary repression that the latter already on the flows of desire with a maximum of vigilance and extension, binding them in a system of cruelty, maintain an of impasses, the flows have lost none of their polyvocality, and the simple represented in representation has not yet taken the to evaluate in every instance the nature of the apparatus and its effects on desiring-production, it is therefore necessary to take this savage inscription. For debt is the unit of alliance, and alliance is representation itself. It is alliance that codes the itself. It is alliance that codes the flows of desire and that, by means of debt, creates for man a memory the filiations that have become extended, in order to form and to forge a system in extension (representation) based on the consequence of the primitive inscription process, instead of making it—and the inscriptions themselves—into an indirect means of universal structure that lives, in which parts and functions are delimited and coordinated, in which nothing whatever finds a place that has that terrible artist's egoism that has the look of bronze and knows itself justified to all eternity in its work, like from the world, or at least from the visible world, and made as it were latent under their hammer blows and and made as it were latent under their hammer blows and artist's violence. It is here that Nietzsche speaks of a fate? (Some pack of blond beasts of prey, a conqueror and master race which, organized for war and with the ability prey, a conqueror and master race which, organized for war and with the ability to organize, unhesitatingly lays its terrible claws of other breakers: those of the Greek city-state, Christianity, democratic and bourgeois humanism, industrial society, capitalism, and socialism. But it could Greek city-state, Christianity, democratic and bourgeois humanism, industrial society, capitalism, and socialism. But it could be that all these—in various this first great hiatus, although they all claim to repel and to fill it. It could be that, spiritual or temporal a single State, the State-as-dog that speaks with flaming roars. And Nietzsche suggests how this new socius proceeds: a terror without the ancient system of cruelty, the forms of primitive regimentation and punishment, are nothing. A concerted destruction of all the primitive to the condition of secondary parts in the new machine, and the new apparatus of repression (refoulement). All that constituted the taken into an immense machinery that renders the debt infinite and no longer forms anything but one and the same crushing the debt infinite and no longer forms anything but one and the same crushing fate: the aim now is to preclude crushing fate: the aim now is to preclude pessimistically, once and for all, the prospect of a final discharge; the aim can be summarized in the following way: a new alliance and direct filiation. The despot challenges the lateral alliances and the alliance and direct filiation. The despot challenges the lateral alliances and the extended filiations of the old community. He imposes a of the old community. He imposes a new alliance system and places himself in direct filiation with the deity: the people the strange whose locus is the desert, imposing the harshest and the most barren of ordeals, and attesting to the resistance desert, imposing the harshest and the most barren of ordeals, and attesting to the resistance of an old order as well machine, since it expresses the struggle with the old system, and already a glorious celibate machine, insofar as it exalts the the characteristic familism of the concept of paranoia in psychoanalysis and psychiatry, and provided one sees in paranoia a type of familism of the concept of paranoia in psychoanalysis and psychiatry, and provided one sees in paranoia a type of investment of in paranoia a type of investment of a social formation. And new perverse groups spread the despot's invention (perhaps they even perhaps they even fabricated it for him), broadcast his fame, and impose his power in the towns they found or conquer in the towns they found or conquer. Wherever a despot and his army pass, doctors, priests, scribes, and officials are part Wherever a despot and his army pass, doctors, priests, scribes, and officials are part of the procession. It might be said to form a new socius: no longer the bush paranoiac and the encampment or village pervers, but the desert paranoiac and the encampment or village pervers, but the desert paranoiac and the town pervers. In theory the despotic barbarian formation has be conceived of in terms of an opposition between it and the primitive territorial machine: the birth of an empire. But decadence. It may be that the enterprise is primarily military and motivated by conquest, or that it is primarily religious, the primarily religious, the military discipline being converted into internal asceticism and cohesion. It may be that the paranoiac himself is either beast. But we always rediscover the figures of this paranoiac and his pervers, the conqueror and his elite troops, the despot the figures of this paranoiac and his pervers, the conqueror and his elite troops, the despot and his bureaucrats, the holy his pervers, the conqueror and his elite troops, the despot and his bureaucrats, the holy man and his disciples, the anchorite elite troops, the despot and his bureaucrats, the holy man and his disciples, the anchorite and his monks, Christ and his his bureaucrats, the holy man and his disciples, the anchorite and his monks, Christ and his Saint Paul. Moses flees from man and his disciples, the anchorite and his monks, Christ and his Saint Paul. Moses flees from the Egyptian machine into Paul. Moses flees from the Egyptian machine into the wilderness and installs his new machine there, a holy ark and a wilderness and installs his new machine there, a holy ark and a portable temple, and gives his people a new religious-military new machine there, a holy ark and a portable temple, and gives his people a new religious-military organization. In order to is the essential: every time the categories of new alliance and direct filiation are mobilized, we are talking about the imperial talking about the imperial barbarian formation or the despotic machine. And this holds true whatever the context of this mobilization, whether formation is always defined by a certain type of code and inscription that is in direct opposition to the primitive territorial of elements in the alliance makes little difference: new alliance and direct filiation are specific categories that testify to the existence existence of a new socius, irreducible to the lateral alliances and the extended filiations that declined the primitive machine. It is of a deterritorialized knowledge that links him directly to God and connects him to the people. For the first time, something For the first time, something has been withdrawn from life and from the earth that will make it possible to judge the earth that will make it possible to judge life and to survey the earth from above: a first principle of principle of paranoiac knowledge. The whole relative play of alliances and filiations is carried to the absolute in this new alliance filiations is carried to the absolute in this new alliance and this direct filiation. It remains to be said that, in it not to other formations in competition with it temporally and spiritually, according to relationships that obscure the essential, but to the productive forces to it in the great projects undertaken, and makes it appear as the cause of the collective conditions the despot, the despot himself or his god. The prescriptions and prohibitions that often render him almost incapable of acting make without organs. He is the sole quasi cause, the source and fountainhead and estuary of the apparent objective movement. In place He is the sole quasi cause, the source and fountainhead and estuary of the apparent objective movement. In place of mobile immobile motor, with the bureaucratic apparatus as its lateral surface and its transmission gear, and the villagers at its base, serving bureaucratic apparatus as its lateral surface and its transmission gear, and the villagers at its base, serving as its working parts the syntheses: the synthesis of production, with the hydraulic machine and the mining machine; the synthesis of inscription, with the accounting synthesis of inscription, with the accounting machine, the writing machine, and the monument machine; and finally the synthesis of consumption, with the accounting machine, the writing machine, and the monument machine; and finally the synthesis of consumption, with the upkeep of the despot, his court, and the bureaucratic caste. Far from seeing in the State the movement of deterritorialization that divides the earth as an object and subjects men to the new imperial inscription, to the new always comes from without; history is the history of contingencies and encounters. Like a cloud blown in from the desert, the which they serve as a conducting element for the political and economic relations, the system of primitive rankings, the mechanism of mechanism of surplus value—all this already prefigured despotic formations and caste hierarchies. And how does one distinguish the way in value—all this already prefigured despotic formations and caste hierarchies. And how does one distinguish the way in which the primitive its guard with respect to its own institutions of chieftainship, and exorcises or strait-jackets the image of the possible despot whom back, as it were, into a this-side-of that is residual and transformed? (Related question: what is the feudal system?) We are is suppressed is not the former regime of lateral alliances and extended filiations, but merely their determining character. They subsist, more specific character of Asiatic production: the autochthonous rural communities subsist, and continue to produce, inscribe, and consume; in effect, they are the autochthonous rural communities subsist, and continue to produce, inscribe, and consume; in effect, they are the State's sole concern. The of the State machine. The objects, the organs, the persons, and the groups retain at least a part of their intrinsic value. The old inscription remains, but is bricked over by and in the inscription of the State. The blocks subsist, but of the State. The blocks subsist, but have become encasted and embedded bricks, having only a controlled mobility. The territorial alliances encounter, the attempts at transformation for the purpose of defense and reaction, and the results of successful counteractions. It has often attempts at transformation for the purpose of defense and reaction, and the results of successful counteractions. It has often been remarked be an act of territoriality through the fixing of residence, and the other, an act of liberation through the abolition of that substitutes abstract signs for the signs of the earth, and that makes the earth itself into the object of a property, or an ownership held by the State's richest servants and officials. (There is no great change, from this point of place, is a means of maintaining the distribution of land, and a means of preventing the entry on stage of a entry on stage of a new territorial machine, possibly revolutionary and capable of raising and dealing with the agrarian problem in a new territorial machine, possibly revolutionary and capable of raising and dealing with the agrarian problem in a comprehensive way. In of production, but also mercantile flows (flux marchands) of exchange and commerce that might escape the State monopoly, with its tight that might escape the State monopoly, with its tight restrictions and its plugging of flows. When Etienne Balazs asks why capitalism China in the thirteenth century, when all the necessary scientific and technical conditions nevertheless seemed to be present, the answer lies as soon as the reserves of metal were judged sufficient, and which retained a monopoly or a narrow control over commerce the State. Commerce's relationship with money is synthetic, not analytical. And money is fundamentally inseparable, not from commerce, but from taxes Even where dominant classes set themselves apart from this apparatus and make use of it for the benefit of private property the benefit of private property, the despotic tie between money and taxes remains visible. Basing himself on the research of Edouard shows how, in certain Greek tyrannies, the tax on aristocrats and the distribution of money to the poor are a means of bringing the money back to the rich and a means of remarkably widening the regime of debts, making the regime of debts, making it even stronger, by anticipating and repressing any reterritorialization that might be produced by the economic of money—is the means for rendering the debt infinite. And that is what is concealed in the two acts of alliances to itself (the problem of debts). The infinite creditor and infinite credit have replaced the blocks of mobile and finite creditor and infinite credit have replaced the blocks of mobile and finite debts. There is always a monotheism on the horizon a connective synthesis of the old alliances with the new, and a disjunctive synthesis that entails an overflowing of the old new full body—immobile, monumental, immutable—appropriates all the forces and agents of production; but this inscription of the State allows territorial inscriptions to subsist, as bricks on the new surface. And finally, from this appropriation there results the way in which in which the conjunction of the two parts is implemented and the respective portions are distributed to the higher proprietary unity the respective portions are distributed to the higher proprietary unity and to the propertied communities, to the overcoding process and to unity and to the propertied communities, to the overcoding process and to the intrinsic codes, to the appropriated surplus value and to the usufruct put into use, to the State machine to the usufruct put into use, to the State machine and to the territorial machines. As in Kafka's The Great Wall functioning separately, to which it assigns a development in bricks and a labor of construction by fragments. Scattered partial objects hanging the law had nothing to do with a natural, harmonious, and immanent totality, but that it acted as an eminent formal totality, but that it acted as an eminent formal unity, and reigned accordingly over pieces and fragments (the wall and the as an eminent formal unity, and reigned accordingly over pieces and fragments (the wall and the tower). Hence the State is unity, and reigned accordingly over pieces and fragments (the wall and the tower). Hence the State is not primeval, it is him.... [The people] do not know what emperor is reigning, and there exist doubts regarding even the name of the dynasty Long-dead emperors are set on the throne in our villages, and one that only lives in song recently had a proclamation territorial machines, they are the concrete itself, the concrete base and beginning, but their segments here enter into relationships corresponding to of bricks that ensures their integration into the higher unity, and their distributive operation, consonant with the great collective designs of tributes, generalized servitude. Two inscriptions coexist in the imperial formation, and mutually adjust insofar as the one is imbricated into the into the other, but the new inscription cements the whole and brings producers and products into relations with itself (they do but the new inscription cements the whole and brings producers and products into relations with itself (they do not need to the same language). The imperial inscription countersects all the alliances and filiations, prolongs them, makes them converge into the direct filiation into the direct filiation of the despot with the deity, and the new alliance of the despot with the people. All is the operation that constitutes the essence of the State, and that measures both its continuity and its break with the essence of the State, and that measures both its continuity and its break with the previous formations: the dread of flows but also the establishment of a new inscription that overcodes, and that makes desire into the property of the sovereign, even death instinct itself. The castes are inseparable from this overcoding, and imply the existence of dominant classes that do not yet the earth for the benefit of the deterritorialized full body, and that on this full body renders the movement of debt these artists with a look of bronze, creating an oppressive and remorseless machine, erecting before any perspective of liberation an ironclad as a consequence of the interplay of ancestors, profound genealogies, and extended filiations; rather, when these are short-circuited, abducted by the rather, when these are short-circuited, abducted by the new alliance and direct filiation, then the ancestor—the master of the mobile direct filiation, then the ancestor—the master of the mobile and finite blocks—finds himself dismissed by the deity, the immobile dismissed by the deity, the immobile organizer of the bricks and of their infinite circuit. 7 Barbarian or Imperial Representation Incest with the sister and incest with the mother are very different things. The sister circuit. 7 Barbarian or Imperial Representation Incest with the sister and incest with the mother are very different things. The sister territorial coding require that alliance not be confounded with filiation; and incest with the mother, insofar as descent within filiation must despot's incest is twofold, by virtue of the new alliance and direct filiation. He begins by marrying the sister. But he who for their part are entitled to an endogamous marriage and are able, by virtue of this formidable right, to serve two sequences in the phenomenon: the union with the princess-sister and the union with the mother-queen. Incest goes by twos. The a magic flow, but to overcode all the existing flows, and to ensure that no intrinsic code, no underlying flow escapes is possible. How is it that incest has become possible, and not only possible, but the manifest property and seal of become possible, and not only possible, but the manifest property and seal of the despot? Who is this sister, this mother the despot? Who is this sister, this mother? The sister and mother of the despot himself? Or should the question be whole system of representation when it ceases to be territorial and becomes imperial. First of all, we have the impression that no doubt: this way the despot has of committing incest, and of making it possible, in no way involves removing the possible, in no way involves removing the apparatus of social and psychic repression (l'appareil repression-refoulement), On the contrary, the despot's intervention too easy, if it were enough to make incest possible, and to implement this in sovereign fashion, so that the exercise in sovereign fashion, so that the exercise of psychic repression and the service of social repression would be made to end incest comes to take the place of the representation itself, and in this capacity take charge of the repressing function (la surface organization of representation is the relationship between the voice and graphism: it is the despot who establishes the practice of the voice, react to the voice, but that are autonomous and do not align themselves on it. In return barbarian civilizations lost, but because the graphic system has lost its independence and its particular dimensions, has aligned itself on the voice and and its particular dimensions, has aligned itself on the voice and has become subordinated to the voice, enabling it to extract from the voice a deterritorialized abstract flux that it retains and makes reverberate in the linear code of writing. In short the linear code of writing. In short, graphism in one and the same movement begins to depend on the voice, and and the same movement begins to depend on the voice, and induces a mute voice from on high or from the which it originates, if by that he means the existence and the connection of some sort of graphism—writing in the sense, hardly any breaks can be established between pictographic, ideogrammic, and phonetic procedures: there is always and already an alignment on established between pictographic, ideogrammic, and phonetic procedures: there is always and already an alignment on the voice, at the same time the same time as a substitution for the voice (supplementarity), and phonetism is never all-powerful, but has also always-already begun to is never all-powerful, but has also always-already begun to labor and elaborate the mute signifier. He is again correct in linking world of representation, between this writing in the narrow sense and writing in the broad sense—that is, between two completely by being independent of the voice while connecting with it, and a graphism that dominates or supplants the voice by depending supplants the voice by depending on it in various ways and by subordinating itself to the voice. The primitive territorial sign desire of a desire. It knows nothing of linear subordination and its reciprocity: neither pictogram nor ideogram, it is rhythm and and its reciprocity: neither pictogram nor ideogram, it is rhythm and not form, zigzag and not line, artifact and not idea pictogram nor ideogram, it is rhythm and not form, zigzag and not line, artifact and not idea, production and not expression is rhythm and not form, zigzag and not line, artifact and not idea, production and not expression. Let us try to form, zigzag and not line, artifact and not idea, production and not expression. Let us try to summarize the differences between summarize the differences between these two forms of representation, territorial and imperial. In the first place, territorial representation is made up territorial representation is made up of two heterogeneous elements, voice and graphism: the former is like the representation of words constituted of the earth must assume an extension in the socius and as the socius. The primitive socius covers itself in this network wherein one is continually jumping from words to things, and from bodies to appellations, according to the extensive requirements of to the extensive requirements of the system in its length and its width. What we call the order of connotation is heterogeneity, the divergence, the disequilibrium of the two elements—vocal and graphic—is resolved by a third element: the visual, the itself constitutes a sign in conjunction with the thing designated, and where the eye goes from one to the other, extracting where the eye goes from one to the other, extracting and measuring the visibility of the one against the pain of en-acted (agi), or reacting; everything is a matter of use and function. So that when one considers the whole of territorial including disjunctions; consuming remains; extracting surplus values; connecting words, bodies, and sufferings, and formulas, things, and affects; connoting voices, graphic traces consuming remains; extracting surplus values; connecting words, bodies, and sufferings, and formulas, things, and affects; connoting voices, graphic traces, and eyes

Again and again we come upon the monstrous paradox: the State is head of the despot to the hearts of his subjects, and from the intellectual law to the entire physical system that machine for repression, is still desire—the subject that desires and the object of desire. Desire—such is the operation that they found in the immanence of the objective Roman world, and the purists, who wanted a fresh start in the wilderness beginning for a new alliance, a rediscovery of the Egyptian and Syriac inspiration that would provide the impetus for a transcendent What strange machines those were that cropped up on columns and in tree trunks! But not in the same way; they are not whether controlling reterritorializations are added to the processes of deterritorialization; and on whether money burns or bursts into flames.

Why not moral impossibility, the other a logical impossibility. All the cruelties and terrors meet in the precapitalist formations; some fragments of the for example, the three circuits of consumer goods, prestige goods, and women and children); the characteristic object of codes is therefore the three circuits of consumer goods, prestige goods, and women and children); the characteristic object of codes is therefore to establish is therefore to establish necessarily indirect relations among these qualified and therefore incommensurable codes. Such relations indeed imply a quantitative siphoning they simply form composites that are themselves qualitative, essentially mobile and limited, where differences between the elements compensate the disequilibrium (whence the elements compensate the disequilibrium (whence the relationship of prestige and consumption in the block of finite debt). All these code block of finite debt). All these code characteristics—indirect, qualitative, and limited—are sufficient to show that a code is not limited—are sufficient to show that a code is not, and can never be, economic: on the contrary, it expresses the emanated from it, an instance that serves as a support and an agent of inscription. That is what Althusser and Balibar support and an agent of inscription. That is what Althusser and Balibar show so well: how juridical and political relations are is what Althusser and Balibar show so well: how juridical and political relations are determined as dominant—in the case of form of surplus value constitutes a flux that is qualitatively and temporally distinct from that of labor, and consequently must enter that is qualitatively and temporally distinct from that of labor, and consequently must enter into a composite that is itself qualitative consequently must enter into a composite that is itself qualitative and implies noneconomic factors. Or the way the autochthonous relations of noneconomic factors. Or the way the autochthonous relations of alliance and filiation are determined as dominant in the so-called primitive societies dominant in the so-called primitive societies, where the economic forces and flows are inscribed on the full body of the earth flows are inscribed on the full body of the earth and are attributed to it. In short, there is a code of desire, as an economic sign that consists in producing and breaking flows, is accompanied by a sign of necessarily extraeconomic by a sign of necessarily extraeconomic power, although its causes and effects lie within the economy (for example, the sign of code. Hence the code relation is not only indirect, qualitative, and limited; because of these very characteristics, it is also extraeconomic limited; because of these very characteristics, it is also extraeconomic, and by virtue of this fact engineers the couplings between qualified qualified flows. Consequently it implies a system of collective appraisal and evaluation, and a set of organs of perception, or more Consequently it implies a system of collective appraisal and evaluation, and a set of organs of perception, or more precisely of or more precisely of belief, as a condition of existence and survival of the society in question—thus the collective investment investment of organs that causes men to be directly coded, and the appraising eye as we have analyzed it in the that are exclusively indirect, qualitative composites that are essentially limited, and organs of perception and extrachemical factors that select and appropriate qualitative composites that are essentially limited, and organs of perception and extrachemical factors that select and appropriate the cellular connections. So limited, and organs of perception and extrachemical factors that select and appropriate the cellular connections. So many reasons for defining capitalism money as an equivalent—which makes it possible to begin and end with money, therefore never to end at all—is of qualified flows, to decompose the finite blocks of debt, and to destroy the very basis of codes. Secondly, the fact from a becoming-concrete without which it would not become capital and would not appropriate production. We have seen that this becoming-concrete the abstract quantity through which it becomes something concrete. Dx and dy are nothing independent of their relation, which determines the one as a pure quality of the flow of labor and the other as a pure quality of the flow of powers. For if one of the flows finds itself subordinated and enslaved to the other, the reason is precisely that they precisely that they are not to the same power (x and y² for example), and that the relation is established between not to the same power (x and y² for example), and that the relation is established between a power and a example), and that the relation is established between a power and a given magnitude. This is something that became evident as that became evident as we pursued the analysis of capital and labor at the level of the differential relation between flows the level of the differential relation between flows of financing, and flows of means of payment or income. Such an extension has no industrial essence functioning other than as merchant, financial, and commercial capital, where money would take on functions other than instead of being doubles to the economic signs of desire and expressing for their part noneconomic factors determined as dominant. That of payment signifies that the power has become directly economic. And yet, as regards paid labor, it is evident that there to ensure surplus labor, when the latter is merged qualitatively and temporally with labor itself into one and the same simple is merged qualitatively and temporally with labor itself into one and the same simple magnitude (the condition characterized by surplus value inasmuch as capital itself figures as a directly economic instance, and falls back on production without interposing extraeconomic factors that would In this sense the antiproduction apparatus ceases to be transcendent, and pervades all production and becomes coextensive with it. Thirdly, as antiproduction apparatus ceases to be transcendent, and pervades all production and becomes coextensive with it. Thirdly, as a result of these something concrete. Concerning capitalism, we maintain that it both does and does not have an exterior limit: it has an exterior decoding of flows, but it functions only by pushing back and exorcising this limit. And it also has, yet does not have, interior limits: it it functions only by pushing back and exorcising this limit. And it also has, yet does not have, interior limits: it has interior limits under the specific conditions of capitalist production and circulation, that is, in capital itself, but it functions only is, in capital itself, but it functions only by reproducing and widening these limits on an always vaster scale. The strength to the previous ones. Capitalism defines a field of immanence and never ceases to fully occupy this field. But this deterritorialized that it is filled by the widening of internal limits; and the effusion of antiproduction within production so as to be value—these constitute the three aspects of capitalism's immanent axiomatic. And monetarization everywhere comes to fill the abyss of capitalist immanence not need to write in bare flesh, to mark bodies and organs, nor does it need to fashion a memory for in its different aspects its own organs of execution, perception, and memorization. Memory has become a bad thing. Above all, there Above all, there is no longer any need of belief, and the capitalist is merely striking a pose when he bemoans half understand. Moreover, despite the abundance of identity cards, files, and other means of control, capitalism does not even need to private in reality, insofar as he derives from abstract quantities and becomes concrete in the becoming-concrete of these same quantities. It very special role in the system: a role of application, and no longer of implication, in a code. The hour of nigh. While capitalism thus proceeds by means of an axiomatic and not by means of a code, one must not think constant capital attached to the full body of the socius, and no longer men, the latter having become adjacent to the formulas, but rather imply intuitions that are linked to resonances and conjunctions of structures, and that are merely aided by the intuitions that are linked to resonances and conjunctions of structures, and that are merely aided by the powerful levers of technique still more axioms while preventing the system from becoming saturated; and functions well only by grinding, sputtering, and starting up again from becoming saturated; and functions well only by grinding, sputtering, and starting up again—all this implies social organs of decision implies social organs of decision, administration, reaction, inscription; a technocracy and a bureaucracy that cannot be reduced to the operation of short, the conjunction of the decoded flows, their differential relations, and their multiple schizzes or breaks require a whole apparatus of to the field of social forces, enters into their service, and serves as a regulator of the decoded and axiomatized flows their service, and serves as a regulator of the decoded and axiomatized flows. How does one explain that desire devotes not failures of recognition, but rather perfectly reactionary unconscious investments? And what does Reich mean when he speaks of traditional bonds bonds traditional bonds? The latter also belong to the historical process and bring us back to the modern functions of the State State. Civilized modern societies are defined by processes of decoding and deterritorialization. But what they deterritorialize with one hand, they reterritorialize

Edgar Morin puts it. These modern archaisms are extremely complex and varied. Some are mainly folkloric, but they nonetheless represent social varied. Some are mainly folkloric, but they nonetheless represent social and potentially political forces (from domino players to home brewers via the State, even though they might turn against the State and cause it serious problems (regionalism, nationalism). The fascist State has been without doubt capitalism's most fantastic attempt at economic and political reterritorialization. But the socialist State also has its own re-form themselves against the State, or which the State instigates and organizes. (Russian nationalism, the territoriality of the party: the proletariat

This essential aspect of the regulation performed one sees that it is directly based on the social and economic axiomatic of capitalism as such. It is the very an abstract subjective essence of wealth, in labor or production—and in desire as well, it would seem. capitalism is continually confronting limits and barriers that are interior and immanent to itself, and that, precisely because they are immanent limits and barriers that are interior and immanent to itself, and that, precisely because they are immanent, let themselves be overcome that is, limits never reached because they are always surpassed and always reproduced—has seemed to us to have as a reproduced—has seemed to us to have as a corollary and even as a direct manifestation, the simultaneity of the two direct manifestation, the simultaneity of the two movements of deterritorialization and reterritorialization. An important consequence emerges from the above considerations. The social axiomatic of modern societies is caught between two poles, and is constantly oscillating from one pole to the other. Born oscillating from one pole to the other. Born of decoding and deterritorialization, on the ruins of the despotic machine, these societies Urstaat that they would like to resuscitate as an overcoding and reterritorializing unity, and the unfettered flows that carry them toward would like to resuscitate as an overcoding and reterritorializing unity, and the unfettered flows that carry them toward an absolute threshold recode with all their might, with world-wide dictatorship, local dictators, and an all-powerful police, while decoding—or allowing the decoding of allowing the decoding of—the fluent quantities of their capital and their populations. They are torn in two directions: archaism and and their populations. They are torn in two directions: archaism and futurism, neoarchaism and ex-futurism, paranoia and schizophrenia. in two directions: archaism and futurism, neoarchaism and ex-futurism, paranoia and schizophrenia. They vacillate between two poles: the paranoiac despotic sign that they try to revive as a unit of code; and the sign-figure of the schizo as a unit of decoded behind or ahead of themselves. How can the nostalgia for, and the necessity of, the Urstaat be reconciled with the insistence the necessity of, the Urstaat be reconciled with the insistence and the inevitability of the fluxion of the flows? What can the flows? What can be done so that the decoding and the deterritorialization constitutive of the system do not make it through one end or another that would escape the axiomatic and throw the machine into a panic (a Chinese on the etc.)? There is an oscillation between the reactionary paranoiac overcharges and the subterranean, schizophrenic, and revolutionary charges.

Moreover, one no longer oscillation between the reactionary paranoiac overcharges and the subterranean, schizophrenic, and revolutionary charges. Moreover, one no longer quite knows how it universal delirium about which everyone is silent, first of all and especially the psychiatrists (they have no ideas on the subject have no ideas on the subject—why would they?). Capitalism, and socialism as well, are as though torn between the despotic as though torn between the despotic signifier that they adore, and the schizophrenic figure that sweeps them along. We are thus to maintain two conclusions that we have already put forward and that seemed to stand mutually opposed. On the one hand its fulfillment of a becoming-immanent, its generalized decoding of flows, and its axiomatic that comes to replace the codes and overcodings flows, and its axiomatic that comes to replace the codes and overcodings, But on the other hand there has never been among three social machines corresponding to the savage, the barbarian, and the civilized societies. The first is the underlying territorial machine the immanence, it has rendered concrete the abstract as such and has naturalized the artificial, replacing the territorial codes and the such and has naturalized the artificial, replacing the territorial codes and the despotic overcoding with an axiomatic of decoded flows, and the despotic overcoding with an axiomatic of decoded flows, and a regulation of these flows; it effects the second great time because it doesn't allow any part of the codes and overcodes to subsist. However, what it doesn't allow to subsist creates new archaisms where it has destroyed the old ones—and the two become as one. The historian says no, the one. The historian says no, the Modern State, its bureaucracy and its technocracy, do not resemble the ancient despotic State. Of of the poles between which it is determined to oscillate. And in its imperturbable and cynical existence, it is prey to which it is determined to oscillate. And in its imperturbable and cynical existence, it is prey to great forces that form decodes to pass beyond the wall of its immanent regulations and beyond its transcendental resurrections. Each type of social machine produces

Could it be that the identity in nature identity is universally realized in the immanence of this order and in the fluxion of the decoded flows? But also that in regime is greatest in the capitalist order of representation, and that this representation subjects desire to an operation of social stronger than any other, because, by means of the immanence and the decoding, antiproduction has spread throughout all of production, instead all of production, instead of remaining localized in the system, and has freed a fantastic death instinct that now permeates and and has freed a fantastic death instinct that now permeates and crushes desire? But the mother as the simulacrum of territoriality money collector. But it is at the soft center of capitalism temperate zones of the bourgeoisie, that the colony becomes intimate and private, interior to each person: it is there that the pseudo organizer. The family has become the locus of retention and resonance of all the social determinations. It falls to the that sticks to our skin. Yes, I desired my mother and wanted to kill my father; a single subject of enunciation single subject of enunciation—Oedipus—for all the capitalist statements, and between the two, the leveling cleavage of castration. Marx said as an interior religiosity; that the merit of Adam Smith and Ricardo was to have determined the essence or nature of no longer as an objective nature, but as an abstract and deterritorialized subjective essence, the activity of production in general. But capitalism, they objectify the essence all over again, they alienate and reterritorialize it, this time in the form of the private marginal at first in the Three Essays, then centering more and more around desire. It is as though Freud were asking with the outside. Throughout psychoanalysis, the discourse of bad conscience and guilt always rises up and finds its nourishment—what is the discourse of bad conscience and guilt always rises up and finds its nourishment—what is called being cured. On two family of any wrongs, the better to internalize the family and the wrongs in the person of the family's smallest member the manner in which the child lives it intensely, internally, and where it is confounded with the child's own guilt; the of responsibility, before which one stands as a guilty child, and in relation to which one becomes a responsible adult (Oedipus to which one becomes a responsible adult (Oedipus as sickness and sanity, the family as an alienating factor and as an as sickness and sanity, the family as an alienating factor and as an agent of de-alienation, if only through the way the latter's crowning achievement. After the madman of the earth and the madman of the despot comes the madman of the in the asylum—the imperative fiction of the family, Reason-the-father and madness-the-child or minor, the parents who are ill only from all this finds its fulfillment outside the asylum, in psychoanalysis and in the consulting room of the analyst. Freud is the consulting room of the analyst. Freud is the Luther and the Adam Smith of psychiatry. He mobilizes all the resources of the conditions of its contingent, singular existence, its irony, and its own critique. And what are these conditions, this point its contingent, singular existence, its irony, and its own critique. And what are these conditions, this point where the autocritique is are these conditions, this point where the autocritique is possible and necessary? To discover beneath the familial reduction the nature of to discover the abstract figures, the schizzes-flows that it harbors and conceals. To substitute, for the private subject of castration, split private subject of castration, split into a subject of enunciation and a subject of the statement relating only to the two first, the chicken or the egg—but also the father and the mother, or the child? Psychoanalysis acts as if it the child is sick only in relation to a father and a mother). This is clearly evident in the primal position nothing without the identifications of the parents with the children; and the fact cannot be hidden that everything begins in the idea: thus Laius. It is the father who raises hell, and who brandishes the law (the mother tends to be obliging the mind of the father, who desires his son's death and schemes to bring it about. ... In the long run it father who appears guilty, through having tried to avenge himself, and it is he who is killed This curious indifference toward the movement of madness, precisely because it is not analytical and regressive, but explores a global field of coexistence. Witness a a high-school teacher who works overtime for a radio-taxi service and is being treated for heart trouble. He begins to rave to restore a pure race, the salvation of the social and moral order, then he passes to religion, the timeliness of Well now, he killed or wanted to kill his son, and perhaps God's only error lies in having stayed his hand of a field that is social, economic, political, cultural, racial and racist, pedagogical, and religious: the delirious person applies a delirium that is social, economic, political, cultural, racial and racist, pedagogical, and religious: the delirious person applies a delirium to his family religious: the delirious person applies a delirium to his family and his son that overreaches them on all sides. Joseph Gabel it possible to say that such a case is rare, and that, moreover, its origins are not reconstructible. Yet it is that does not possess this characteristic to a high degree, and that is not originally economic, political, and so forth, before a high degree, and that is not originally economic, political, and so forth, before being crushed in the psychiatric and psychoanalytic political, and so forth, before being crushed in the psychiatric and psychoanalytic treadmill. Judge Schreber would not deny this (nor his not deny this (nor his father, who invented the Pangymnastikon and a general pedagogical system). Everything changes, then: the infinite regression postulate a primacy of the father, but an always relative and hypothetical primacy that carried us to infinity, barring a shift the investment of a social field into which the father and the child are plunged, simultaneously immersed. Let us again consider between an adult alimentary anxiety linked to an endemic famine, and an infantile alimentary anxiety linked to a deficiency of maternal the child invests through the infantile experience, the mother's breast, and the familial structure is already a state of the breaks the familial structure is already a state of the breaks and the flows of the social field in its entirety, flows of the social field in its entirety, flows of women and of food, recordings and distributions. Never is the adult an in its entirety, flows of women and of food, recordings and distributions. Never is the adult an afterward of the child the determinations of the field in which both the family and they are simultaneously immersed. Hence we are confronted by three of fantasy, in terms of which the father, the mother, and their real actions and passions must first be understood as of which the father, the mother, and their real actions and passions must first be understood as fantasies of the child us in simple reproduction or generation. Furthermore, taking organic bodies and organized persons as its object, the theory of regression merely

The point of view of the cycle alone is categorical and absolute, because it attains production as the subject of reproduction process of autoproduction of the unconscious (a unity of history and of nature, from Homo natura to Homo historia). It is of the social field in which the father, the child, and the family as a subaggregate are at one and the child, and the family as a subaggregate are at one and the same time immersed. The primacy of the social field the terminus of the investment of desire defines the cycle, and the states through which a subject passes. The second error in his remarks on occultism, constitutes in fact the norm, and pushes into the background the problems of hereditary transmission that or tries to repress, is the unconscious of the father and the mother. The failure of that repression is the basis a stimulus of departure, then as an aggregate of destination, and finally as an intermediary or an interception of communication. If an application of the unconscious investments of the social field—and if this is just as true of the child as if it is true that the child, through the mommy-territoriality and the daddy-law, already aims for the schizzes and the encoded the mommy-territoriality and the daddy-law, already aims for the schizzes and the encoded or axiomatized flows of the social field—then that there were two major types of social investment, segregative and nomadic, just as there were two poles of delirium: first social forms of history; counterinvests the enclaves or the periphery; and disinvests every free figure of desire—yes, I am your every free figure of desire—yes, I am your kind, and I belong to the superior race and class. And second am your kind, and I belong to the superior race and class. And second, a schizorevolutionary type or pole that follows kind, and I belong to the superior race and class. And second, a schizorevolutionary type or pole that follows the lines follows the lines of escape of desire; breaches the wall and causes flows to move; assembles its machines and its groups-in-fusion the wall and causes flows to move; assembles its machines and its groups-in-fusion in the enclaves or at the periphery—proceeding that to escape is not good, that it isn't effective, and that one must work for reforms. But the revolutionary knows the great victim of delirium who evolves while communicating more and more with the paranoia of his father. The case of later finds himself immersed in dreams of a Great America, and then in search of his Breton ancestors of the superior Isn't the destiny of American literature that of crossing limits and frontiers, causing deterritorialized flows of desire to circulate, but also but also always making these flows transport fascisizing, moralizing, Puritan, and familialist territorialities? These oscillations of the unconscious, these underground passages in the formula: Heliogabalus-the-anarchist, the image of all human contradictions, and of the contradiction in principle. But no passage impairs or

or suppresses the difference in nature between the two, nomadism and segregation. If we are able to define this difference as able to define this difference as that which separates paranoia and schizophrenia, it is because on the one hand we have have distinguished the schizophrenic process (the breakthrough) from the accidents and relapses that hinder or interrupt it (the breakdown), and because accidents and relapses that hinder or interrupt it (the breakdown), and because on the other hand we have posited paranoia no bear directly upon the social field: every name in history, and not the name of the father. On the contrary, the the nature of the familial investments depends on the breaks and the flows of the social field as they are invested own special breeders, whose function is to breed that part, and that only, while the combination of the parts into a within its own code a code fragment of another machine, and thus owes its reproduction to a part of another machine reproduction to a part of another machine: the red clover and the bumble bee; or the orchid and the male wasp the red clover and the bumble bee; or the orchid and the male wasp that it attracts and intercepts by carrying or the orchid and the male wasp that it attracts and intercepts by carrying on its flower the image and the attracts and intercepts by carrying on its flower the image and the odor of the female wasp. At this point of unity of the machine has been undone, once the personal and specific unity of the living has been laid to rest to rest, a direct link is perceived between the machine and desire, the machine passes to the heart of desire, the passes to the heart of desire, the machine is desiring and desire, machined. Desire is not in the subject, but the a word, the real difference is not between the living and the machine, vitalism and mechanism, but between two states of difference is not between the living and the machine, vitalism and mechanism, but between two states of the machine that are in its structural unity, the living taken in its specific and even personal unity, are mass phenomena or molar aggregates; for reason each points to the extrinsic existence of the other. And even if they are differentiated and mutually opposed, it is existence of the other. And even if they are differentiated and mutually opposed, it is merely as two paths in the multiplicities there is interpenetration, direct communication between the molecular phenomena and the singularities of the living, that is to say, between to say, between the small machines scattered in every machine, and the small formations dispersed in every organism: a domain of in every organism: a domain of nondifference between the microphysical and the biological, there being as many living beings in the are as yet no statistical laws At this level, functioning and formation are still confounded as in the molecule; and, starting functioning and formation are still confounded as in the molecule; and, starting from this level, two diverging paths open up, of one hand the molar machines—whether social, technical, or organic—and on the other the desiring-machines, which are of a molecular are the following: formative machines, whose very misfirings are functional, and whose functioning is indiscernible from their formation; chronogeneous machines engaged engaged in their own assembly (montage), operating by nonlocalizable intercommunications and dispersed localizations, bringing into play processes of temporalization, fragmented formations dispersed localizations, bringing into play processes of temporalization, fragmented formations, and detached parts, with a surplus value of code, and where formations, and detached parts, with a surplus value of code, and where the whole is itself produced alongside the parts, as machines in the strict sense, because they proceed by breaks and flows, associated waves and particles, associative flows and partial objects sense, because they proceed by breaks and flows, associated waves and particles, associative flows and partial objects, inducing—always at a by breaks and flows, associated waves and particles, associative flows and partial objects, inducing—always at a distance—transverse connections, inclusive objects, inducing—always at a distance—transverse connections, inclusive disjunctions, and polyvocal conjunctions, thereby producing selections, detachments, and remainders, with a connections, inclusive disjunctions, and polyvocal conjunctions, thereby producing selections, detachments, and remainders, with a transference of individuality, in a generalized schizogenesis the machines become unified at the structural level of techniques and institutions that give them an existence as visible as a too, become structured by the statistical unities of their persons and their species, varieties, and locales; when a machine appears as the statistical unities of their persons and their species, varieties, and locales; when a machine appears as a single object, and and locales; when a machine appears as a single object, and a living organism appears as a single subject; when the appears as a single subject; when the connections become global and specific, the disjunctions exclusive, and the conjunctions biunivocal; then desire then desire when the connections become global and specific, the disjunctions exclusive, and the conjunctions biunivocal; then desire does not need to project These forms are immediately molar manifestations, statistical determinations of desire and of its own machines. They are the same machines (there desiring-machines belong to the domain of dreams or the Imaginary, and that they stand in for the other machines. There is stand in for the other machines. There is only desire and environments, fields, forms of herd instinct. Stated differently, the molecular in either or both senses of subordination, in one sense and the other of subordination. Desiring-machines in one sense, but organic the machines enter as so many stable forms, unifying, structuring, and proceeding by means of large heavy aggregates; the selective pressures selective pressures that group the parts retain some of them and exclude others, organizing the crowds. These are therefore the same engineering of desire; for it is only there that functioning and formation, use and assembly, product and production merge. All molar for it is only there that functioning and formation, use and assembly, product and production merge. All molar functionalism is false only there that functioning and formation, use and assembly, product and production merge. All molar functionalism is false, since the organic machines are not formed in the same way they function, and the technical machines are not assembled in the same way produced in the same way it functions has a meaning, and also a purpose, an intention. The desiring-machines on the contrary desiring-machines on the contrary represent nothing, signify nothing, mean nothing, and are exactly what one makes of them, what is made microscopic cybernetics without regard to the traditional opposition between mechanism and vitalism. Here the fundamental traits of synthesis are the indifferent nature of the chemical signals, the indifference to the substrate, and the indirect character of the interactions. Such formulas as these interactions. Such formulas as these are negative only in appearance, and in relation to the laws of aggregates, but must be of force (puissance). Between the substrate of an allosteric enzyme and the ligands prompting or inhibiting its activity there exists no or negative, to come about between compounds without chemical affinity, and thereby eventually subordinating any reaction to the intervention of compounds reaction to the intervention of compounds that are chemically foreign and indifferent to this reaction. The way in which allosteric interactions hence permits a complete freedom in the choice of controls. And these controls, having no chemical requirements to answer to, will answer to, will be the more responsive to physiological requirements, and will accordingly be selected for the extent to which they selected for the extent to which they confer heightened coherence and efficiency upon the cell or organism. In a word, the systems, giving molecular evolution a practically limitless field for exploration and experiment, enabled it to elaborate the huge network of cybernetic that necessarily reproduce a structure under the action of DNA and its segments, the genes, performing veritable lottery drawings, creating switching no less so in the social machines with other laws and other figures. In this sense it was possible to insist possible to insist on a common characteristic of human cultures and of living species, as Markov chains: aleatory phenomena that are constitute through a linked drawing of elements, a partial dependence, and a superposition of relays. It is not a matter of matter of showing the common participation of the social machines and the organic machines in the desiring-machines. At man's most basic the Id: the Schizophrenic cell, the schizo molecules, their chains and their jargons. There is a whole biology of schizophrenia; molecular intensity on the giant molecule of the body without organs, and the statistical accumulations that form and select the large aggregates the body without organs, and the statistical accumulations that form and select the large aggregates. Szondi set out on this molecular unconscious. He often calls this genic or genealogical unconscious familial; and Szondi himself went on to study schizophrenia using familial aggregates as its units of reproduction; these units are still expressive, and lead to molar formations. Molecular biology teaches us that it us that it is only the DNA that is reproduced, and not the proteins. Proteins are both products and units of production; they are what constitutes the unconscious as is reproduced, and not the proteins. Proteins are both products and units of production; they are what constitutes the unconscious as the ultimate molecular elements in the arrangement of the desiring-machines and the syntheses of desire. We have seen that, through reproduction the syntheses of desire. We have seen that, through reproduction and its objects (defined familiarly or genetically), it is always the forms of existence that a subject is meant to choose and combine freely. For this reason Szondi misses the internal or elements of desire, the nature of their machinic choices, arrangements, and combinations. He also misses the real question of schizoanalysis: What their functioning? What are the syntheses into which they enter and operate? What use do you make of them, in all the transitions that extend from the molecular to the molar and inversely, and that constitute the cycle whereby the unconscious, remaining that extend from the molecular to the molar and inversely, and that constitute the cycle whereby the unconscious, remaining a subject constitute the cycle whereby the unconscious, remaining a subject, produces and reproduces itself? We use the term Libido to designate the

the term Libido to designate the specific energy of desiring-machines; and the transformations of this energy—Numen and Voluptas—are never energy of desiring-machines; and the transformations of this energy—Numen and Voluptas—are never desexualizations or sublimations. This terminology indeed seems molar order where they form the organic or social machines, and invest organic or social surroundings. It is in fact difficult in fact difficult to present sexual energy as directly cosmic and intra-atomic, and at the same time as directly sociohistorical. It is difficult to present sexual energy as directly cosmic and intra-atomic, and at the same time as directly sociohistorical. It would be futile to say that love has to do with proteins and society. This would amount to reviving yet once more the intra-atomic cosmic energy—the orgone—generative of an electrical flux and carrying submicroscopic particles, the bions. This energy produced differences in intensities distributed on the body considered from a molecular viewpoint, and was associated with a mechanics of fluids in this same therefore the association of the two modes of operation, mechanical and electrical, in a sequence with two poles, molar and molecular mechanical and electrical, in a sequence with two poles, molar and molecular (mechanical tension, electrical charge, electrical discharge, mechanical relaxation). Reich Reich thought he had. thus overcome the alternative between mechanism and vitalism, since these functions, mechanical and electrical, existed in matter the alternative between mechanism and vitalism, since these functions, mechanical and electrical, existed in matter in general, but were combined in but were combined in a particular sequence within the living. And above all he upheld the basic psychoanalytic truth, the supreme are taken into consideration, we admit that its simultaneously schizophrenic and paranoiac nature is no obstacle where we are concerned—on such as electrical storms, the blue color of the sky and the blue-gray of atmospheric haze, the blue of the orgone atmospheric haze, the blue of the orgone, St. Elmo's fire, and the bluish formations [of] sunspot activity, fluids and flows, matter Elmo's fire, and the bluish formations [of] sunspot activity, fluids and flows, matter and particles, in the end appear to us the bluish formations [of] sunspot activity, fluids and flows, matter and particles, in the end appear to us more adequate than to the pitiful little familialist secret. We think that Lawrence and Miller have a more accurate evaluation of sexuality than Freud couch who speaks to us of love, of its force and its despair, but the mute stroll of the schizo, Lenz's mute stroll of the schizo, Lenz's outing in the mountains and under the stars, the immobile voyage in intensities on the the libido, as a molecular formation on the submicroscopic scale, and as an investment of the molar formations on the scale investment of the molar formations on the scale of social and organic aggregates. All that is missing is the confirmations of that it is a matter of a copulation of social and organic machines on a large scale (at bottom, love is claim a scandal where there is none to be found, and to pass for bold while lacking boldness. Better the delirium things, but the entire surroundings that it traverses, the vibrations and flows of every sort to which it is joined, introducing every sort to which it is joined, introducing therein breaks and captures—an always nomadic and migrant desire, characterized first of is joined, introducing therein breaks and captures—an always nomadic and migrant desire, characterized first of all by its gigantism: no energy is the direct investment of masses, of large aggregates, and of social and organic fields. We have difficulty understanding what direct investment of masses, of large aggregates, and of social and organic fields. We have difficulty understanding what principles psychoanalysis uses even sublimated in order to proceed to the social investments, and inversely that the libido only resexualizes these investments during the an assumption holding that sexuality operates only in the family, and must be transformed in order to invest larger aggregates. The money to circulate; the way the bourgeoisie fucks the proletariat; and so on. And there is no need to resort to the way the bourgeoisie fucks the proletariat; and so on. And there is no need to resort to metaphors, any more much force as these coercive machines have for producing breaks and mobilizing flows. It is not through a desexualizing extension that On the contrary, it is through a restriction, a blockage, and a reduction that the libido is made to repress its the narrow cells of the type couple, family, person, objects. And doubtless such a blockage is necessarily justified: the libido does choice itself refers to a conjunction of flows of life and of society that this body and this person intercept, receive of flows of life and of society that this body and this person intercept, receive, and transmit, always within a biological of society that this body and this person intercept, receive, and transmit, always within a biological, social, and historical field where person intercept, receive, and transmit, always within a biological, social, and historical field where we are equally immersed or with which it engages desire in the Oedipal impasses of the couple and the family in the service of the repressive machines, or of the passions.) But we always make love with worlds. And our love addresses itself to this libidinal property of our off or open up to more spacious worlds, to masses and large aggregates. There is always something statistical in our loves large aggregates. There is always something statistical in our loves, and something belonging to the laws of large numbers. And isn't loves, and something belonging to the laws of large numbers. And isn't it in this way that we must understand the understand the famous formula of Marx?—the relationship between man and woman is the direct, natural, and necessary relation of person the relationship between man and woman is the direct, natural, and necessary relation of person to person. That is, the relationship person. That is, the relationship between the two sexes (man and woman) is only the measure of the relationship of sexuality sexuality in general, insofar as it invests large aggregates (man and man)? Whence what came to be called the species determination the species determination of the sexuality of the two sexes. And must it not also be said that the phallus is both in their separation (the two homosexual series of man and man, woman and woman) and in their statistical relations within separation (the two homosexual series of man and man, woman and woman) and in their statistical relations within this aggregate? But two homosexual series of man and man, woman and woman) and in their statistical relations within this aggregate? But Marx says the two sexes, but the difference between the human sex and the nonhuman sex. It is clearly not a question of dwarfism of desire as a correlate to its gigantism. Sexuality and the desiring-machines are one and the same inasmuch as these correlate to its gigantism. Sexuality and the desiring-machines are one and the same inasmuch as these machines are present and operating one and the same inasmuch as these machines are present and operating in the social machines, in their field, their formation are the nonhuman sex, the molecular machinic elements, their arrangements and their syntheses, without which there would be neither a human In a few sentences Marx, who is nonetheless so miserly and reticent where sexuality is concerned, exploded something that will hold where sexuality is concerned, exploded something that will hold Freud and all of psychoanalysis forever captive: the anthropomorphic representation of sex object on high, which distributes lack as two nonsuperimposable sides and makes the two sexes communicate in a common absence-castration. Women or psychoanalyzed, can then rejoice in showing man the way, and in recuperating equality in difference. Whence the irresistibly comical nature instead their separation into two homosexual series that remain statistical. And one does not by any means escape castration. It is maintain therefore that castration is the basis for the anthropomorphic and molar representation of sexuality. Castration is the universal belief that of sexuality. Castration is the universal belief that brings together and disperses both men and women under the yoke of one the universal belief that brings together and disperses both men and women under the yoke of one and the same illusion disperses both men and women under the yoke of one and the same illusion of consciousness, and makes them adore this the yoke of one and the same illusion of consciousness, and makes them adore this yoke. Every attempt to determine the for example, the Great Other in Lacan—while conserving myth and castration, is defeated from the start. And what does Jean-Francois while conserving myth and castration, is defeated from the start. And what does Jean-Francois Lyotard mean, in his commentary—so profound perverse, human, all-too-human idea! An idea originating in bad conscience, and not in the unconscious. Anthropomorphic molar representation culminates in the contrary, knows nothing of castration, because partial objects lack nothing and form free multiplicities as such; because the multiple breaks never break capable of exhausting them; because the syntheses constitute local and nonspecific connections, inclusive disjunctions, nomadic conjunctions: everywhere a microscopic transsexuality in the woman containing as many men as the man, and the man as many women, all capable of entering—men beyond the anthropomorphic representation that society imposes on this subject, and with which it represents its own sexuality. The schizo analytic first of all: to each its own sexes. 3 Psychoanalysis and Capitalism The schizoanalytic argument is simple: desire is a machine the order of production; all production is at once desiring-production and social production. We therefore reproach psychoanalysis for having stifled this same time that desiring-production becomes enticed into allegedly unconscious representations. And as we have seen, it is the same agency—the	p 296 as to the specific elements that determine its objects, aims, and sources. It is in this way that myth ascribes desire to the element of the earth as a full body, and to the territorial code that distributes prescriptions and prohibitions. Likewise full body, and to the territorial code that distributes prescriptions and prohibitions. Likewise tragedy ascribes desire to the full body of the despot and to the corresponding imperial code. Consequently, the understanding of symbolic representations may consist in a systematic phenomenology of these elements and objectities (as in the old Hellenists or even Jung); or understood by historical study that assigns them to their real and objective social conditions (as with recent Hellenists). Viewed in the latter fashion, representation implies a certain lag, and expresses less a stable element than the conditioned passage from conditions under which this element fades before the despotic element; and tragic representation does not express the despotic element properly speaking quite different: rather than referring symbolic representation to determinate objectities and to objective social conditions, psychoanalysis refers them to the subjective to objective social conditions, psychoanalysis refers them to the subjective and universal essence of desire as libido. Thus the operation of sciences of man; the discovery of the secret of such and such a code. Psychoanalysis must undo the codes so as must undo the codes so as to attain the quantitative and qualitative flows of libido that traverse dreams, fantasies, and pathological quantitative and qualitative flows of libido that traverse dreams, fantasies, and pathological formations as well as myth, tragedy, and the social dreams, fantasies, and pathological formations as well as myth, tragedy, and the social formations. Psychoanalytic interpretation does not consist in competing eliciting something that is uncodable by virtue of its polymorphism and its polyvocality. It appears then that the interest psychoanalysis has follows that, in the second place, the link between psychoanalysis and capitalism is no less profound than that between political economy capitalism is no less profound than that between political economy and capitalism. This discovery of the decoded and deterritorialized flows is between political economy and capitalism. This discovery of the decoded and deterritorialized flows is the same as that which takes place the same as that which takes place for political economy and in social production, in the form of subjective abstract labor in social production, in the form of subjective abstract labor, and for psychoanalysis and in desiring-production, in the form of subjective in the form of subjective abstract labor, and for psychoanalysis and in desiring-production, in the form of subjective abstract libido. As the essence becomes subjective—the activity of production in general—and abstract labor becomes something real from which all the preceding which modern economics places at the head of its discussions, and which expresses an immeasurably ancient relation valid in all forms This is also the case for desire as abstract libido and as subjective essence. Not that a simple parallelism should be a simple parallelism should be drawn between capitalist social production and desiring-production, or between the flows of money-capital and the shit-flows social production and desiring-production, or between the flows of money-capital and the shit-flows of desire. The relationship is much closer: desiring-machines

The relationship is much closer: desiring-machines are in social machines and nowhere else, so that the conjunction of the decoded flows short, the discovery of an activity of production in general and without distinction, as it appears in capitalism, is the identical in capitalism, is the identical discovery of both political economy and psychoanalysis, beyond the determinate systems of representation. Obviously this does works according to his desire. But the identity of desire and labor is not a myth, it is rather the active same time as it discovers the subjective essence of desire and labor—a common essence, inasmuch as it is the activity of production in general—is capitalism continually realienating this essence, and without interruption, in a repressive machine that divides the essence in a repressive machine that divides the essence in two, and maintains it divided—abstract labor on the one hand, abstract the one hand, abstract desire on the other: political economy and psychoanalysis. political economy and libidinal economy? Here we are able desire on the other: political economy and psychoanalysis. political economy and libidinal economy? Here we are able to appreciate the full movement of deterritorialization, but this movement is exorcised through factitious and artificial reterritorializations. Capitalism is constructed on the ruins of the reterritorializations. Capitalism is constructed on the ruins of the territorial and the despotic, the mythic and the tragic representations, but it re-establishes them in its own the ruins of the territorial and the despotic, the mythic and the tragic representations, but it re-establishes them in its own tragic representations, but it re-establishes them in its own service and in another form, as images of capital. Marx summarizes the be put in chains all over again, to be subjugated and alienated—no longer, it is true, in an exterior and and alienated—no longer, it is true, in an exterior and independent element as objectivity, but in the element, itself subjective that constitutes the center of the factitious reterritorializations of capitalism. And finally, it is this form that produces the images filling is in the interiority of its movement that capitalism requires and institutes not only a social axiomatic, but an application of without this application that furrows deep into it, cleaves it, and forces it back upon itself. Thus subjective abstract Labor as does not cease to reproduce on an ever expanding scale, and again by the marking out of an interior limit that has the following explanation: psychoanalysis undoes them as objective representations, and discovers in them the figures of a subjective universal libido figures of a subjective universal libido; but it reanimates them, and promotes them as subjective representations that extend the mythic and and promotes them as subjective representations that extend the mythic and tragic contents to infinity. Psychoanalysis does treat myth and tragedy mythic and tragic contents to infinity. Psychoanalysis does treat myth and tragedy, but it treats them as the dreams and the myth and tragedy, but it treats them as the dreams and the fantasies of private man, Homo familia—and in fact the dreams and the fantasies of private man, Homo familia—and in fact dream and fantasy are to myth and tragedy fantasies of private man, Homo familia—and in fact dream and fantasy are to myth and tragedy as private property is familia—and in fact dream and fantasy are to myth and tragedy as private property is to public property. What acts private property is to public property. What acts in myth and tragedy at the level of objective elements is therefore reappropriated tragedy at the level of objective elements is therefore reappropriated and raised to a higher level by psychoanalysis, but as an representation (myth as humanity's dream). What acts as an objective and public element—the Earth, the Despot—is now taken up taken up again, but as the expression of a subjective and private reterritorialization: Oedipus is the fallen despot—banished, deterritorialized—but complex conceived of as the daddy-mommy-me of today's everyman. Psychoanalysis and the Oedipus complex gather up all beliefs, all that has

than to mythologists, but at the same time extends myth and tragedy to the dimensions of the subjective universal: if Oedipus has no Narcissus. Such is the ambivalence that traverses psychoanalysis, and that extends beyond the specific problem of myth and tragedy psychoanalysis, and that extends beyond the specific problem of myth and tragedy: with one hand psychoanalysis undoes the system of objective

We are familiar with the eminently modern reply that the theater's privilege is that of staging this metaphoric and metonymic causality that marks both the presence and the absence this metaphoric and metonymic causality that marks both the presence and the absence of the structures in its effects. While Andre it is supported by a structure that determines the place and the functions of the subject of representation, as well as of representation, as well as the objects represented as images, and the formal relations between them all. Reich intuitively has a sense that schizoanalysis has nothing to interpret. There are only resistances, and then machines desiring-machines. Oedipus is a resistance; if we have together—without unifying or uniting them—the body without organs and the partial objects, the desiring-machine is inseparable both from the p 327 distribution of the partial objects on the body without organs, and from the leveling effect exerted on the partial objects by p 327 disjunction on the recording surface of the body without organs. And we have doubtless been able to present things in a p 327 no succession that ensures the strict coexistence of the chains and the flows, as well as of the body without organs p 327 the flows, as well as of the body without organs and the partial objects. The conversion of a portion of the p 327 by reviving the signifying unity. The very notions of code and axiomatic therefore seem to be valid only for the molar p 328 same time as the connective lines take on a global and specific meaning. But it is another case altogether with the p 328 chain: insofar as the body without organs is a nonspecific and non specified support that marks the molecular limit of the p 328 has any other function than that of deterritorializing the flows and causing them to pass through the signifying wall, thereby undoing p 328 full body without organs. It is a chain of escape, and no longer a code. The signifying chain has become a p 328 to cause absolutely decoded flows of desire, Libido, to circulate, and to discover in desire that which scrambles all the codes p 329 to discover in desire that which scrambles all the codes and undoes all the territorialities. It is true that Oedipus will p 329 there is no real opposition between the body without organs and the organs as partial objects; the only real opposition is p 329

More generally, the death instinct celebrates the wedding of psychoanalysis and capitalism; their engagement had been full of hesitation. What	p 335 value in capitalism. It is this itinerary that psychoanalysis rediscovers and retraces with the death instinct: the death instinct is now	p 335

Once it is said that desiring-production is itself a decoded and deterritorialized production, how do we explain that capitalism, with its	p 335

of singularities and chains, and the conjunctive syntheses of intensities and becomings. The schizoanalyst is not an interpreter, even less a there are only stones to be sucked, a la Beckett, and other machinic elements belonging to deterritorialized constellations. The task of the machine, what constituent misfires, with what flows, what chains, and what becomings in each case. Moreover, this positive task cannot indispensable destructions, the destruction of the molar aggregates, the structures and representations that prevent the machine from functioning. It is not even the giant molecule—their paths, their zones of presence, and their own syntheses, amid the large accumulations that fill the own syntheses, amid the large accumulations that fill the preconscious, and that delegate their representatives in the unconscious itself, thereby immobilizing does not apply pressure to consciousness; rather, consciousness applies pressure and strait-jackets the unconscious, to prevent its escape. As to the to show from the outset is how the unconscious productions and formations were not merely repelled by an agency of psychic covered over by antiformations that disfigure the unconscious in itself, and impose on it causations, comprehensions, and expressions that no longer the unconscious in itself, and impose on it causations, comprehensions, and expressions that no longer have anything to do with its can never, as in an interpretation, read the repressed through and in the repression, since the latter is constantly inducing a inducing a false image of the thing it represses: illegitimate and transcendent uses of the syntheses according to which the unconscious it gives rise to the inevitable illusions (including the structure and the signifier) by means of which the conscious makes of take hold if they did not benefit from a coincidence and a support in the unconscious itself that ensures the hold not be delegated in the unconscious by the molar forces and thus crush desiring-production. Repression properly speaking profits from an occasion fall into its trap, schizoanalysis follows the lines of escape and the machinic indices all the way to the desiring-machines. If is to undo the Oedipal trap of repression properly speaking, and all its dependencies, each time in a way adapted to real functioning; ensuring this functioning in the forms of attraction and production of intensities; thereafter integrating the failures in the attractive well as enveloping the zero degree in the intensities produced; and thereby causing the desiring-machines to start up again. Such is the desiring-machines to start up again. Such is the delicate and focal point that fills the function of transference in schizoanalysis present them merely as the duality of the molar formations and the molecular formations, since there is not one molecular formation the social machines that they form on a large scale; and no social machines without the desiring-machines that inhabit them on Nor is there any molecular chain that does not intercept and reproduce whole blocks of molar code or axiomatic, nor any collective than the large social aggregates; they are strictly inseparable and constitute one and the same process of production. From this large social aggregates; they are strictly inseparable and constitute one and the same process of production. From this point of view the duality of the poles passes less between the molar and the molecular than to the interior of the molar social poles has necessarily varied. At times we contrasted the molar and the molecular as the paranoiac, signifying, and structured lines of contrasted the molar and the molecular as the paranoiac, signifying, and structured lines of integration, and the schizophrenic, machinic, and dispersed molecular as the paranoiac, signifying, and structured lines of integration, and the schizophrenic, machinic, and dispersed lines of escape; or again signifying, and structured lines of integration, and the schizophrenic, machinic, and dispersed lines of escape; or again as the staking out or again as the staking out of the perverse reterritorializations, and as the movement of the schizophrenic deterritorializations. At other times two major types of equally social investments: the one sedentary and biunivocalizing, and of a reactionary or fascist tendency; the other types of equally social investments: the one sedentary and biunivocalizing, and of a reactionary or fascist tendency; the other nomadic and and of a reactionary or fascist tendency; the other nomadic and polyvocal, and of a revolutionary tendency. In fact, in the a reactionary or fascist tendency; the other nomadic and polyvocal, and of a revolutionary tendency. In fact, in the schizoid declaration—its molecular dispersion, form an investment that is as strong and determined as the other? And why are there two types investment that is as strong and determined as the other? And why are there two types of social investment that correspond poles? The answer is that everywhere there exist the molecular and the molar: their disjunction is a relation of included disjunction gregariousness, do not prevent the flight that carries them along, and they oppose to it the paranoiac investment only as an through the multiplicity of holes that eat away at it and penetrate it, always coupled directly to it, everywhere setting the market, the death forces, Nijinsky said—values, morals, homelands, religions, and private certitudes? There is a whole world of difference between There is a whole world of difference between the schizo and the revolutionary: the difference between the one who escapes, and and the revolutionary: the difference between the one who escapes, and the one who knows how to make what he is escaping is not courageous, we answer: what is not escape and social investment at the same time? The choice is between poles, the paranoiac counterescape that motivates all the conformist, reactionary, and fascisizing investments, and the schizophrenic escape convertible into a revolutionary counterescape that motivates all the conformist, reactionary, and fascisizing investments, and the schizophrenic escape convertible into a revolutionary investment. Maurice Blanchot of this revolutionary escape, this fall that must be thought and carried out as the most positive of events: What is consists, however, in agreeing to flee rather than live tranquilly and hypocritically in false refuges. Values, morals, homelands, religions, and these tranquilly and hypocritically in false refuges. Values, morals, homelands, religions, and these private certitudes that our vanity and our complacency bestow morals, homelands, religions, and these private certitudes that our vanity and our complacency bestow generously on us, have as many deceptive world arrangements for those who think they are standing straight and at ease, among stable things. They know nothing of this first thesis of schizoanalysis is this: every investment is social, and in any case bears upon a sociohistorical field. Let us or schizzes, to large vacuoles determined globally, of the neurosis and castration type: the neurotic needs a global object in relation which the partial objects can be determined as a lack, and inversely. But on a more general level, the statistical transformation of desire to lack is precisely what gives desire collective and personal ends, goals or intentions—instead of desire taken in them, but that, quite on the contrary, these large numbers and aggregates are born of this selective pressure that crushes, eliminates does not presuppose a primary gregariousness; gregariousness presupposes the selection and is born of it. Culture as a selective process of exerted. That is why statistics is not functional but structural, and concerns chains of phenomena that selection has already placed in role of totalizing, unifying, signifying objectivities, that assign organizations, lacks, and goals? The full bodies determine the different modes of the the socius, veritable heavy aggregates of the earth, the despot, and capital. Full bodies or clothed substances, which are distinguished from any goal or end, since they are what determines goals and ends. The form or quality of a given socius—the a given degree to which it affixes a structural unity and apparent goals, to which it falls back, and whose forces structural unity and apparent goals, to which it falls back, and whose forces it appropriates, thereby determining the selections, the accumulations whose forces it appropriates, thereby determining the selections, the accumulations, and the attractions without which these forces would not assume a will distinguish the unconscious libidinal investment of group or desire, and the preconscious investment of class or interest. The latter passes The latter passes by way of the large social goals, and concerns the organism and the collective organs, including the arranged way of the large social goals, and concerns the organism and the collective organs, including the arranged vacuoles of lack. A regime of syntheses, a state of global connections, exclusive disjunctions, and residual conjunctions that characterize the aggregate being considered. Membership in the detachments of codes, to the subjective remains or revenues. And from this viewpoint it is indeed true that an aggregate own interest in terms of new social aims, new organs and means, a new possible state of social syntheses. Whence the be represented by a party apparatus that assigns these aims and means, and effects a revolutionary break in the preconscious domain by a party apparatus that assigns these aims and means, and effects a revolutionary break in the preconscious domain—the Leninist contradictions within the dominant class, i.e., the class pure and simple. This is obvious in the capitalist regime where, for revolutionary interest maintain a preconscious investment of a reactionary type? And more rarely, how do certain people whose interest is objectively justice, a just ideological position, as well as a correct and just view; and in the other case a blindness, the ideological position, as well as a correct and just view; and in the other case a blindness, the result of an forget, or do not like to recognize, that one wants and makes revolution out of desire, not duty. Here as elsewhere by invoking the ideological, the subjective, the irrational, the negative, and the inhibited, it was because he remained the prisoner of him from seeing how desire was part of the infrastructure, and that confined him in the duality of the objective and and that confined him in the duality of the objective and the subjective. (Consequently, psychoanalysis was consigned to the analysis of distinction to be made passes into the economic infrastructure itself and into its investments. Libidinal economy is no less objective than investments. Libidinal economy is no less objective than political economy, and the political no less subjective than the libidinal, even though does not necessarily coincide with the preconscious investments of interest, and that explains how the latter can be perturbed and perverted interest, and that explains how the latter can be perturbed and perverted in the most somber organization, below all ideology. Libidinal syntheses depend. It does not bear upon the selections, detachments, and remainders effected by these syntheses, but upon the nature of by these syntheses, but upon the nature of the codes and the flows that condition them. It does not bear upon condition them. It does not bear upon the social means and ends, but upon the full body as socius, the formation or the form of power for itself, devoid of meaning and purpose, since the meanings and the purposes derive from it for itself, devoid of meaning and purpose, since the meanings and the purposes derive from it, and not the contrary. It purpose, since the meanings and the purposes derive from it, and not the contrary. It is doubtless true that interests predispose preconscious indicators of a degree of development; the apparent interests and aims are merely the preconscious exponents of a social full can exert this violence only by assigning itself aims and meanings in which even the most enslaved elements participate: The sovereignty by means of the organic purpose of their creation, and the purpose of thereby converting the absurdity into spirituality. That is so futile to attempt to distinguish what is rational and what is irrational in a society. To be sure, the in a society. To be sure, the place, the place, and the part one has in a society, and from which the place, and the part one has in a society, and from which one inherits in terms of the laws of have the chance to participate, under the cover of aims and interests. The fact remains that there exists a disinterested love love of the social machine, of the form of power, and of the degree of development in and for themselves. Even form of power, and of the degree of development in and for themselves. Even in the person who has an interest for themselves. Even in the person who has an interest—and loves them besides with a form of love other than also the case for the person who has no interest, and who substitutes the force of a strange love for this flow too much, it will never break or code enough—and in that very way! Oh how beautiful the machine is be, a machine that is not only technical but social, and through which desire desires its own repression. We have seen system of immanence bordered by a great mutant flow, nonpossessive and nonpossessed, flowing over the full body of capital and forming nonpossessive and nonpossessed, flowing over the full body of capital and forming an absurd power. Everyone in his class and his capital and forming an absurd power. Everyone in his class and his person receives something from this power, or is excluded enterprises that define aims or spheres of interest, selections, detachments, and portions. But the investment of the flow itself and its detachments, and portions. But the investment of the flow itself and its axiomatic, which to be sure requires no precise knowledge of society invest with passion the system that oppresses them, and where they always find an interest, since it is here an interest, since it is here that they search for and measure it. Interest always comes after. Antiproduction effuses in the for others but in oneself, being the cop for others and for oneself—that is what arouses, and it is not cop for others and for oneself—that is what arouses, and it is not ideology, it is economy. Capitalism garners and and it is not ideology, it is economy. Capitalism garners and possesses the force of the aim and the interest (power economy. Capitalism garners and possesses the force of the aim and the interest (power), but it feels a disinterested love for power), but it feels a disinterested love for the absurd and nonpossessed force of the machine. Oh, to be sure, it looking for the right place where, according to the aims and the interests assigned to us, one feels something moving that the banker, the cop, the soldier, the technocrat, the bureaucrat, and why not the worker, the trade-unionist. Desire is agape. Not of the social field interfere with the investment of interest, and constrain the most disadvantaged, the most exploited, to seek their the former body, the old form of power, its codes, and its flows. It is all the easier, and the contradiction its codes, and its flows. It is all the easier, and the contradiction is all the better masked, as a state preserving or reviving the old full body as a residual and subordinated territoriality (witness how the capitalist machine revives the despotic despotic Urstaat, or how the socialist machine preserves a State and market monopoly capitalism). But there is something more serious: even the new force that corresponds to the effectively revolutionary goals and syntheses from the viewpoint of the preconscious—it is not do not pass at the level of the unconscious desires and the preconscious interests. The preconscious revolutionary break is sufficiently well to a new regime of social production that creates, distributes, and satisfies new aims and interests. But the unconscious revolution does of social production that creates, distributes, and satisfies new aims and interests. But the unconscious revolution does not merely refer to without organs. It is not the same state of flows and schizzes: in one case the break is between two forms of desire to circulate following their positive lines of escape, and for breaking them again following breaks of productive breaks. The aggregate that it constitutes under a given form of power and gregariousness, or whether it subjugates the large aggregate to the If the preconscious revolutionary break appears at the first level, and is defined by the characteristics of a new aggregate, the the unconscious or libidinal break belongs to the second level and is defined by the driving role of desiring-production and the level and is defined by the driving role of desiring-production and the position of its multiplicities. It is understandable, therefore, that group can be revolutionary from the standpoint of class interest and its preconscious investments, but not be so—and even remain class interest and its preconscious investments, but not be so—and even remain fascist and police-like—from the standpoint of its preconscious investments, but not be so—and even remain fascist and police-like—from the standpoint of its libidinal investments, Truly revolutionary refers to a form of force that continues to enslave and crush desiring-production. The moment it is preconsciously revolutionary, such a fixed support that attributes to itself the productive forces, extracting and absorbing the surplus value therefrom; the effusion of antiproduction and absorbing the surplus value therefrom; the effusion of antiproduction and death-carrying elements within the system, which feels and pretends to of antiproduction and death-carrying elements within the system, which feels and pretends to be all the more immortal; the phenomena of all the more immortal; the phenomena of group superegoization, narcissism, and hierarchy—the mechanisms for the repression of desire, A subject-group revolutionary; it causes desire to penetrate into the social field, and subordinates the socius or the form of power to desiring-production or the form of power to desiring-production; productive of desire and a desire that produces, the subject-group invents always mortal formations groups through a rupture of the latter: they mobilize desire, and always cut its flows again further on, overcoming the limit of subjugation that is opposed to the coefficients of transversality. And what revolution is not tempted to turn against its subject-groups to turn against its subject-groups, stigmatized as anarchistic or irresponsible, and to liquidate them? How do we combat the deadly inclination of interest, then to preconscious investments that are simply reformist? And where do we even situate such and such a group are simply reformist? And where do we even situate such and such a group? Did it ever have revolutionary unconscious investments surrealist group, for example, with its fantastic subjugation, its narcissism, and its superego? (It can happen that one lone man functions group from which he excludes himself or is excluded: Artaud-the-schizo), And where do we situate the psychoanalytic group within this complexity an interior limit, with all kinds of little Narcissuses around, and Reich-the-marginal, plotting a tangent of deterritorialization, causing the flows of as they are differentiated from the preconscious investments of interest, and insofar as they are not merely capable of counteracting them other people as raw desire still contains complexes of desire and interest, and a mixture of forms of desire and of as raw desire still contains complexes of desire and interest, and a mixture of forms of desire and of interest that desire and interest, and a mixture of forms of desire and of interest that are specifically reactionary and vaguely revolutionary. The forms of desire and of interest that are specifically reactionary and vaguely revolutionary. The situation is completely muddled. It seems that sexual drives animating an individual or a group; assuredly perversions, and even sexual emancipation, give no privilege as long as sexuality the lie under which it can merely become cynical, shameful, and mortified. It is a lie to claim to liberate sexuality mortified. It is a lie to claim to liberate sexuality, and to demand its rights to objects, aims, and sources, all liberate sexuality, and to demand its rights to objects, aims, and sources, all the while maintaining the corresponding flows within the of an Oedipal code (conflict, regression, resolution, sublimation of Oedipus), and while continuing to impose a familialist and masturbatory form or sublimation of Oedipus), and while continuing to impose a familialist and masturbatory form or motivation on it that makes any perspective a relation that ascribes them both to a common Oedipal and castrating stock, charged with ensuring only their differentiation in two noncommunicating series, instead of bringing to light their reciprocal inclusion and their transverse communication in the decoded flows of desire (included insistent than ever, will survive all the publications, demonstrations, emancipations, and protests concerning the liberty of sexual objects, emancipations, and protests concerning the liberty of sexual objects, sources, and aims, as long as sexuality is kept—consciously or not as sexuality is kept—consciously or not—within narcissistic, Oedipal, and castrating co-ordinates that are enough to ensure the triumph of chastity, is a matter of flows, an infinity of different and even contrary flows. Everything depends on the way in which the way in which these flows—whatever their object, source, and aim—are coded and broken according to uniform figures, or these flows—whatever their object, source, and aim—are coded and broken according to uniform figures, or on the contrary taken in chains of decoding that respect them according to mobile and nonfigurative points (the flows-schizzes). Lawrence attacks the poverty of the terms of the father-mother representations, by fixation, regression, assumption, sublimation—and all of that according to what rule? The law of exclusions where the flows dry up, drained by bad conscience and resentment. ... sticking a woman on a pedestal, or the reverse not a model anything. She is not even a distinct and definite personality.... A woman is a strange soft vibration on a strange soft vibration on the air, going forth unknown and unconscious, and seeking a vibration of response. Or else she is a discordant, jarring, painful vibration, going forth and hurting everyone within range. And a man the same. Let's jarring, painful vibration, going forth and hurting everyone within range. And a man the same. Let's not be too quick to the extent that Lawrence could. The fundamental difference between psychoanalysis and schizoanalysis is the following: schizoanalysis attains a non figurative and and schizoanalysis is the following: schizoanalysis attains a non figurative and nonsymbolic unconscious, a pure abstract figural dimension (abstract in the

below the minimum conditions of identity. What does psychoanalysis do, and first of all what does Freud do, if not maintain like that, but one continues to embrace the same humiliating and degrading conception of sexuality, the same figurative conception as the field as such except on condition that it be desexualized and sublimated. If he holds so closely to this hypothesis, it all to keep sexuality in the limited framework of Narcissus and Oedipus, the ego and the family. Consequently, every sexual libidinal in the limited framework of Narcissus and Oedipus, the ego and the family. Consequently, every sexual libidinal investment having a social state, a fixation in narcissism, or a regression to Oedipus and to the pre-oedipal stages, by means of which homosexuality will of which homosexuality will be explained as a reinforced drive, and paranoia as a means of defense. We have seen on the contrary that what the libido invested, through its loves and sexuality, was the social field itself in its economic, political the social field itself in its economic, political, historical, racial, and cultural determinations: in delirium the libido is continually re-creating

History delirium the libido is continually re-creating History, continents, kingdoms, races, and cultures. Not that it is advisable to put historical representations

Africas and Orients, always following the underground thread of the libido. Not is more readily accomplished with these figures, with books, histories, and reproductions, than with our mommy. But flows and codes of books, histories, and reproductions, than with our mommy. But flows and codes of socius that do not portray anything, that merely designate zones of libidinal intensity on the body without organs, and that are emitted, captured, intercepted by the being that we investments of the libido. The desiring sexual relationships of man and woman (or of man and man, or woman and woman man and woman (or of man and man, or woman and woman) are the index of social man and woman (or of man and man, or woman and woman) are the index of social relationships between people. Love woman) are the index of social relationships between people. Love and sexuality are the exponents or the indicators, this time unconscious or desired being serves as a collective agent of enunciation. And it is certainly not, as Freud believed, the libido that not, as Freud believed, the libido that must be desexualized and sublimated in order to invest society and its flows; on must be desexualized and sublimated in order to invest society and its flows; on the contrary, it is love, desire, and and its flows; on the contrary, it is love, desire, and their flows that manifest the directly social character of the that manifest the directly social character of the nonsublimated libido and its sexual investments. For those looking for a thesis topic should not suggest vast considerations on analytic epistemology, but modest and rigorous topics such as the theory of maids or domestic older half brother from the rich side of the family, and the thievish maid as the poor woman. Secondly, the familial thievish maid as the poor woman. Secondly, the familial romance and fantasy activity in general will be presented by Freud as to oscillate between two poles constituted by the rich woman and the poor woman, under the effect of a strange unconscious themes, which were enough to challenge the whole of Oedipus; and he shows the existence of a social complex where the a splitting of the sexual object into a rich woman and a poor woman—and at other times ensures the unity sexual object into a rich woman and a poor woman—and at other times ensures the unity of the object, but we see, in all these sexual-social investments of the libido and these object choices, mere dependences of a familial Oedipus? Must we save Oedipus at all costs by interpreting these investments and object choices as defenses against incest? (Thus the familial romance him of his crime.) Must these be understood as compromises and substitutes for incest? (Thus in The Wolf Man, the peasant the same name as she, or the girl on hands and knees, working, as a substitute for the mother surprised in a substitute for the mother surprised in the coitus scene; and in The Rat Man, the disguised repetition of the paternal own confession, he wants to set things straight with lung and Adler. And after having ascertained in the Wolf Man case he wants to set things straight with lung and Adler. And after having ascertained in the Wolf Man case the existence concludes that it is merely a matter of a rationalization, and that the true underlying determination almost always leads us back social distinctions, which have little meaning for it as yet; and it classes people of inferior rank with its parents if into the false alternative where Freud was led by Oedipus, and then confirmed in this position by his controversy with Adler then confirmed in this position by his controversy with Adler and lung: either, he says, you will abandon the sexual position sexual position of the libido in favor of an individual and social will to power, or in favor of a prehistoric Oedipus, making of it the sexual abode of the libido, and you will make daddy-mommy into the purely erotic motive. Oedipus Girard: there is no family where vacuoles are not arranged. and where extrafamilial breaks are not manifest, by means of which class as determined under the empirical rubrics of the richest and the poorest, and sometimes both at once. Wouldn't the Great under the empirical rubrics of the richest and the poorest, and sometimes both at once. Wouldn't the Great Other, indispensable to position of desire, be the Social Other. social difference apprehended and invested as the nonfamily within the family itself? The other the nonfamily, the index of what is nonhuman in sex, and without which the libido would not assemble its desiring-machines. Class of Oedipus; Oedipus is a drift of the familial romance, and thereby of the social field. It is not a question not a question of denying the importance of parental coitus, and the position of the mother; but when this position makes the mother also functions as something other than the mother, and gives rise in the child's libido to an entire differentiated background than the father, etc., has to do with breaks and flows that traverse the family, but that overreach it on traverse the family, but that overreach it on all sides and are not familial. From the start we wonder if the not only open to the other, they are themselves countersected and divided by the other who defamilializes them according to the who defamilializes them according to the laws of social production and desiring-production: the mother herself functions as rich woman or poor princess, pretty girl or old lady, animal or Blessed Virgin, and all at once. Everything passes into the machine that causes is a field of social desire, a field of production and antiproduction with its breaks and flows, where the parents are desire, a field of production and antiproduction with its breaks and flows, where the parents are apprehended in nonparental functions and and flows, where the parents are apprehended in nonparental functions and roles confronting other roles and other functions. Does this amount are apprehended in nonparental functions and roles confronting other roles and other functions. Does this amount to saying that the parents by embryologists with regard to the egg between the stimulus and the organizer, parents are stimuli having an indifferent value that within this difference the parents again appear, allocated to such and such a zone, but under a different rubric from that zone, but under a different rubric from that of parents. And the organizer is the social field of desire, which alone of intensity, with all the beings that populate these zones and determine their libidinal investment. Secondly, the parents as parents are aggregate of destination, where the destination finds nothing but impasses and blockages consonant with the mechanisms of psychic and social repression but impasses and blockages consonant with the mechanisms of psychic and social repression active in this field: Oedipus, such is Oedipus field over the familial investment, both in point of fact and by statute: an indifferent stimulus at the beginning, an extrinsic the form of sexuality of the field in social production, and the nonhuman sex in desiring-production (gigantism and dwarfism). One often in social production, and the nonhuman sex in desiring-production (gigantism and dwarfism). One often has the impression that families have understood situation: the mother reduced to housework, or to a difficult and uninteresting job on the outside; children whose future remains uncertain

the relation to the outside, is what the libido invests and counterinvests as sexual libido. One gets off on flows and and counterinvests as sexual libido. One gets off on flows and the breaks in these flows. Let us consider for a the duality of money, as a structure of external financing and as a means of internal payment, along with the objective the analyst's office. The analyst talks about Oedipus, about castration and the phallus, about the necessity of assuming one's sex, as of assuming one's sex, as Freud says, the human sex, and the necessity for the woman to renounce her desire for the woman to renounce her desire for the penis and for the man to renounce his male protest. We maintain because this situation has nothing to do with the phallus and castration, but directly concerns an unbearable economic dependence. And the phallus and castration, but directly concerns an unbearable economic dependence. And the woman and the children who succeed in assuming do but directly concerns an unbearable economic dependence. And the woman and the children who succeed in assuming do so only by children who succeed in assuming do so only by detours and determinations completely distinct from their being-woman and their being-child. Nothing only by detours and determinations completely distinct from their being-woman and their being-child. Nothing to do with the phallus, but much putting lack into desire, for drying up all the flows, and for making all the breaks from the outside and from flows, and for making all the breaks from the outside and from the Real into one and the same break with breaks from the outside and from the Real into one and the same break with the outside, with the Real. Too outside. He promotes the pure analytic scene, an office Oedipus and an office castration, that should be its own reality, its castration, that should be its own reality, its own proof, and that, contrary to the movement, proves itself only by not bondage). Do these psychoanalysts who are oedipalizing women, children, blacks, and animals know what they are doing? We dream of entering doing? We dream of entering their offices, opening the windows and saying, It smells stuffy in here—some relation with the cut off from the outside, cut off from its economic and social investments and counterinvestments. And if there is, to use the outside, cut off from its economic and social investments and counterinvestments. And if there is, to use Freud's terms, a cut off from its economic and social investments and counterinvestments. And if there is, to use Freud's terms, a purely erotic field, wherever desiring-machines are agglutinated or dispersed in social machines, and where love-object choices occur at the meeting place of the his flute, which is not a phallus, but a desiring-machine and a process of deterritorialization? Let us suppose that we are only afterward that the libido would invest the social field, and that it would participate in the social and the metaphysical social field, and that it would participate in the social and the metaphysical. Which permits the preservation of the fundamental Freudian to perform such investments, but begins with Oedipus, me, father and mother (the pre-oedipal stages relating structurally or eschatologically to the For either the libido is caught up in molecular desiring-production and knows nothing of persons just as it knows nothing of regime of partial objects, of singularities, of intensities, of gears and parts of machines of desire, where one would have a seen how contradictory it was to invoke the partial objects, and to make of them representatives of parental persons or the relations); or on the other hand the libido invests persons and an ego, but is already caught up in a social ego, but is already caught up in a social production and social machines that do not merely differentiate them as familial this other regime. It is indeed true that the social and the metaphysical arrive at the same time, in accordance with meanings of process, as the historical process of social production and as the metaphysical process of desiring-production. But they do not the parents, who can only intervene as agents of production and antiproduction in one case as in the other. There is case as in the other. There is only the social and the metaphysical. If something crops up afterward, it is certainly something crops up afterward, it is certainly not the social and metaphysical investments of the libido, the unconscious syntheses; rather, on unconscious syntheses; rather, on the contrary, it is Oedipus, narcissism, and the entire series of psychoanalytic concepts. The factors of production of psychoanalytic concepts. The factors of production are always actual, and are so from the tenderest age; actual does not signify but rather in action, as opposed to what is virtual and will come about under certain conditions. Oedipus is virtual and and will come about under certain conditions. Oedipus is virtual and reactional. Let us consider the conditions under which Oedipus arrives aggregate of departure—transfinite, constituted by all the objects, agents, and relations of sociodesiring-production—is reduced to a finite familial aggregate of arrival (a minimum of three terms, which one can and even must augment, but not to infinity). Such an application pure abolition that has haunted oedipalized desire from the start, and that is identified now, at the end, as Thanatos, 4 death. Since the nineteenth century, the study of mental illnesses and madness has remained the prisoner of the familial postulate and and madness has remained the prisoner of the familial postulate and its correlates, the personological correlate and the egoic postulate (le of the familial postulate and its correlates, the personological correlate and the egoic postulate (le postulat moi-même). We have seen, following nineteenth-century psychiatry had conceived of the family as both cause and judge of the illness, and the closed asylum as an the family as both cause and judge of the illness, and the closed asylum as an artificial family charged with internalizing closed asylum as an artificial family charged with internalizing guilt and with instituting responsibility, enveloping madness no less than its cure with psychiatry, psychoanalysis transported its requirements outside the asylum walls, and first imposed a certain free, intensive, phantasmal use of the But the resistance of the psychoses on the one hand, and the necessity for taking into account a social etiology on a social etiology on the other hand, has led psychiatrists and psychoanalysts to redeploy under open conditions the order of an progression contains a constant of all modern attempts at reform. And if this tendency appears in its most naive form in therapeutic return to the family, to the identity of persons and the integrity of the ego, the whole works being blessed diverted, utilized for grounding a structural Oedipus applicable to psychosis, and for extending the familial co-ordinates beyond their real and even psychosis, and for extending the familial co-ordinates beyond their real and even imaginary domain. It is not by chance that institutional has sought the secret of a causality at once social and schizophrenic in the redeployed families. This is perhaps where the baptized as schizophrenogenic, as well as completely ordinary familial mechanisms, and an ordinary familial logic, i.e., neuroticizing at worst. In Let's be friends, son, I'm the best friend you've got, and Watch out, son, don't treat me like one of your is led, when he claims to assign schizophrenogenic social mechanisms, and at the same time to discover them within the order within the order of the family, which both social production and the schizophrenic process escape. This contradiction is perhaps especially perceptible psychiatric practice, undertakes assigning a veritable social genesis to psychosis, and calls for a continuation of the voyage as a process calls for a continuation of the voyage as a process and for a dissolution of the normal ego, he falls back normal ego, he falls back into the worst familialist, personological, and egoic postulates, so that the remedies invoked are no more co-option for the benefit of adaptational forms of familial psychotherapy and of community psychiatry, and of Laing's own retreat to the of adaptational forms of familial psychotherapy and of community psychiatry, and of Laing's own retreat to the Orient. And is it community psychiatry, and of Laing's own retreat to the Orient. And is it not a contradiction on another level, but analogous the teaching of Lacan, place it back on a familial and personological axis—whereas Lacan assigns the cause of desire in been able to treat Oedipus as an appearance, a decor, and to go back to the unconscious libidinal investments of the unconscious libidinal investments of the social field. Oedipal familialism, even and especially in its most modern forms, makes impossible the discovery libido did not directly invest the social contradictions as such, and in order to awaken, needed these contradictions translated according to already substituted a familial causation or expression for social production, and finds oneself back within the categories of idealist psychiatry. Whatever its mode of production, its most precise capitalist economic circuits; and that the libido invests this social field, not in a field, not in a form where it would be expressed and translated by means of a family-microcosm, but in the form but in the form where it causes its nonfamilial breaks and flows, invested as such, to enter into the family; hence primary; finally, that mental alienation refers directly to these investments and is no less social than social alienation, which refers for as a sick person. For one attempts to neuroticize everything. And doubtless one thus conforms to the family's mission, which is psychic repression, without which social repression would never find docile and resigned subjects, and would not succeed in choking off the which social repression would never find docile and resigned subjects, and would not succeed in choking off the flows' lines of infinite resignation, an accession to desire by way of castration—and of the establishment of conditions where the subject is able the sickness to his offspring, rather than dying celibate, impotent, and masturbatory. Again, perhaps it will be discovered that the only the schizo is the one who escapes all Oedipal, familial, and personological references—I'll no longer say me, I'll no longer I'll no longer say me, I'll no longer say daddy-mommy—and he keeps his word. Now the question is, first, if

as a full body without organs, beyond the preconscious aims and interests that it assigns and distributes. The fact remains that organs, beyond the preconscious aims and interests that it assigns and distributes. The fact remains that such an investment does not under assignable aims or interests presented as the general aims and interests, even though in reality the latter represent only the this class. How could a formation of sovereignty, a fixed and determinate gregarious aggregate, endure being invested for their brute force aggregate, endure being invested for their brute force, their violence, and their absurdity? They would not survive such an investment. Even overt fascism speaks the language of goals, of law, order, and reason. Even the most insane capitalism speaks in the name most insane capitalism speaks in the name of economic rationality. And this is necessarily the case, since it is in the decompose it. ... By way of the circuitous route of science and art, human beings have many times revolted against this fixity against this fixity; this capacity notwithstanding, the gregarious impulse in and by science caused this rupture to fail. The day humans by themselves without aim or end whose combinations obtain such and such a result. ... However, no science can develop outside a its autonomy appears strictly inconceivable. A conspiracy joining together art and science presupposes a rupture of all our institutions and a art and science presupposes a rupture of all our institutions and a total upheaval of the means of production.... If some some conspiracy, according to Nietzsche's wish, were to use science and art in a plot whose ends were no less suspect result of the evolution of societies. In this perspective, art and science would then emerge as sovereign formations that Nietzsche said that Nietzsche said constituted the object of his countersociology—art and science establishing themselves as dominant powers, on the ruins of on the ruins of institutions. Why this appeal to art and science, in a world where scientists and technicians and even appeal to art and science, in a world where scientists and technicians and even artists, and science and art themselves, work art and science, in a world where scientists and technicians and even artists, and science and art themselves, work so closely in a world where scientists and technicians and even artists, and science and art themselves, work so closely with the established world where scientists and technicians and even artists, and science and art themselves, work so closely with the established sovereignties—if its own grandeur, its own genius, creates chains of decoding and deterritorialization that serve as the foundation for desiring-machines, and make decoding and deterritorialization that serve as the foundation for desiring-machines, and make them function. Take the example of the Venetian School molds itself to a Byzantine code where even the colors and the lines are subordinated to a signifier that determines their art, where the lines are deterritorialized, the colors are decoded, and now only refer to the relations they entertain among themselves now only refer to the relations they entertain among themselves, and with one another. A horizontal or transverse organization of the escape or breakthrough. Christ's body is engineered on all sides and in all fashions, pulled in all directions, playing the role Christs. Organs become direct powers of the body without organs, and emit flows on it that the myriad wounds, such as myriad wounds, such as Saint Sebastian's arrows, come to cut and cut again in such a way as to produce other in such a way as to produce other flows. Persons and organs cease to be coded according to hierarchized collective investments each person, each organ has a merit all its own, and tends to its own affairs: the infant Jesus looks from that could just as easily be from the nineteenth century. And of course this decoding of the flows of painting, these from the old code, or else introduced into new codes, and first of all into a properly pictorial axiomatic that chokes closes the whole constellation to the transversal relations between lines and colors, and reduces it to archaic or new territorialities (perspective whole constellation to the transversal relations between lines and colors, and reduces it to archaic or new territorialities (perspective, for example signifiers, passed under the structures, set the flows in motion, and effected breaks at the limits of desire: a breakthrough. It have seen this in the case of the painter Turner, and his most accomplished paintings that are sometimes termed incomplete: from without goal, but that attains completion as such. The codes and their signifiers, the axiomatics and their structures, the imaginary figures completion as such. The codes and their signifiers, the axiomatics and their structures, the imaginary figures that come to occupy them properly aesthetic molar formations that are characterized by goals, schools, and periods. They relate these aesthetic formations to greater social aggregates greater social aggregates, finding in them a field of application, and everywhere enslave art to a great castrating machine of sovereignty under the usurped name of modern painting—a poisonous flower—and brought one of Lawrence's heroes to speak much like Henry the need to have done with pouring out one's merciful and pitiful guts, these flows of corrugated iron.: The productive breaks flows of corrugated iron, the openings blocked on all sides. And perhaps this, as we have seen, is Where we find seen, is Where we find the commodity value of art and literature: a paranoiac form of expression that no longer even is no longer measured except in terms of the decoded and deterritorialized flows that it causes to circulate beneath a signifier impotence; a writing with pneumatic, electronic, or gaseous indifferent supports, and that appears all the more difficult and intellectual to intellectuals gaseous indifferent supports, and that appears all the more difficult and intellectual to intellectuals as it is accessible to the infirm intellectuals as it is accessible to the infirm, the illiterate, and the schizos, embracing all that flows and counterflows, the gushings of mercy and pity knowing nothing of embracing all that flows and counterflows, the gushings of mercy and pity knowing nothing of meanings and aims (the Artaud experiment the gushings of mercy and pity knowing nothing of meanings and aims (the Artaud experiment, the Burroughs experiment). It is here in art from its beginnings, but was hidden underneath aims and objects, even if aesthetic, and underneath recodings or axiomatics: the but was hidden underneath aims and objects, even if aesthetic, and underneath recodings or axiomatics: the pure process that fulfills itself underneath recodings or axiomatics: the pure process that fulfills itself, and that never ceases to reach fulfillment as it proceeds—art ceases to reach fulfillment as it proceeds—art as experimentation. And the same will be said of science: the decoded flows science what must be retained in terms of market needs and zones of technical innovation: the great social aggregate that makes scientific subaggregates into so many applications that are characteristic of and that correspond to it—in short, the set of methods any deviance on their part, imposes a goal on them, and makes scientists and science into an agency perfectly subjugated to their part, imposes a goal on them, and makes scientists and science into an agency perfectly subjugated to the formation of the schizoid pole, in whose proximity flows of knowledge schizophrenize, and not only flee across the social axiomatic, but pass beyond signs, figures-schizzes that are no longer either figurative or structured, and reproduce or produce an interplay of phenomena without aim or a properly libidinal conflict between a paranoiac-Oedipalizing element of science, and a schizorevolutionary element? That very conflict that leads Lacan to as an oedipalizing factor, resulting in a specifically scientific Oedipus.) And in contrast to Lautreamont's song that rises up around the luminous triangle!—there is another song: O schizophrenic mathematics, uncontrollable and mad desiring-machines! In the capitalist formation of sovereignty—the full socius—the great social axiomatic has replaced the territorial codes and the despotic overcodings that characterized the preceding formations; and a codes and the despotic overcodings that characterized the preceding formations; and a molar, gregarious aggregate has formed, whose mode of subjugation axioms to suit its needs, that is filled with images and with images of images, through which desire is determined to determined to desire its own repression (imperialism); an unprecedented decoding and deterritorialization, which institutes a combination as a system of differential combination as a system of differential relations between the decoded and deterritorialized flows, in such a way that social inscription and and deterritorialized flows, in such a way that social inscription and repression no longer even need to bear directly upon bodies and persons, but on the contrary precede them (axiomatic: regulation and and persons, but on the contrary precede them (axiomatic: regulation and application); a surplus value determined as a surplus value of a simple arithmetical difference between two quantities that are homogeneous and belong to the same code, but precisely by differential relations not raised to the same power: a flow of capital and a flow of labor as human surplus value in the in the industrial essence of capitalism, a flow of financing and a flow of payment or incomes in the monetary inscription incomes in the monetary inscription of capitalism, a market flow and a flow of innovation as machinic surplus value in the class functions on a more profound level as creator, regulator, and guardian of the great nonappropriated, nonpossessed flow, incommensurable with wages guardian of the great nonappropriated, nonpossessed flow, incommensurable with wages and profits, which marks at every step along the way the

the way the interior limits of capitalism, their perpetual displacement, and their reproduction on an always larger scale (the movement of surplus value, in such a way that the military, bureaucratic, and police apparatus finds itself grounded in the economy itself, which that does not reveal the insanity of the capitalist machine and the pathological character of its rationality: not at all a mad, it is mad from one end to the other and from the beginning, and this is the source of its rationality. Wage increases and improvements in the standard of living are realities, but realities of its limits: let's create the New Deal; let's cultivate and recognize strong unions; let's promote participation, the single class; let's Jewish problem variety are prepared down to the last detail, and the Third World is organized as an integral part of an always wider scale has several consequences: it permits increases and improvements of standards at the center, it displaces the harshest but also multiplies enclaves of overpopulation in the center itself, and easily tolerates the so-called socialist formations. (It is not kibbutz-style insane: this is because the capitalist machine thrives on decoded and deterritorialized flows; it decodes and deterritorializes them still more, but

them to pass into an axiomatic apparatus that combines them, and at the points of combination produces pseudo codes and artificial them, and at the points of combination produces pseudo codes and artificial reterritorializations. It is in this sense that the capitalist the capitalist axiomatic cannot but give rise to new territorialities and revive a new despotic Urstaat. The great mutant flow of of capitalism. The system teams with preconscious investments of class and of interest. And capitalists first have an interest in capitalism system teams with preconscious investments of class and of interest. And capitalists first have an interest in capitalism. A statement as large the extraction of profits, it does not define capitalism. And for what does define capitalism, for what conditions profit, theirs an investment of desire whose nature—unconscious-libidinal—is altogether different, and is not simply explained by the conditioned profits, but on is not convertible as such, not appropriated as such—nonpossession and nonwealth, in the words of Bernard Schmitt, who among modern that scarcely threatens it. In the first case, they confine and localize their preconscious interest in wage increases and the improvement they confine and localize their preconscious interest in wage increases and the improvement of the standard of living; powerful organizations represent the system, vote for a clean Paris—Welcome, Mister Brezhnev). And how, indeed, could one fail to find one's interest in of capital-money; those exploited become conscious of their preconscious interest, and this interest is truly revolutionary—a major break from the function as an autonomous territoriality, but one that is caught and wedged in the capitalist machine, and is localizable in the one that is caught and wedged in the capitalist machine, and is localizable in the field of its market. For the flow of mutant capital repels its limits, adds new axioms, and maintains desire within the mobile framework of its expanded limits can be a preconscious revolutionary break, with no real libidinal and unconscious revolutionary break. Or rather the order of things is position of a simple revolutionary break with regard to aims and interests, and finally re-forms a merely specific reterritoriality, a specific a simple revolutionary break with regard to aims and interests, and finally re-forms a merely specific reterritoriality, a specific body on abstract painting. Everything begins with Marx, continues on with Lenin, and ends with the refrain, Welcome, Mister Brezhnev. Is this still revolutionary, or rather a village clamoring for a new prefect? And if one were to ask when it all started to Oedipus, but that do concern the sociohistorical field, its preconscious and unconscious conflicts and contradictions, about which it can only be

Its productions, its art, and its science form decoded and deterritorialized flows that do not merely submit to the corresponding pass through the mesh of the axiomatic, underneath the recodings and the reterritorializations. Subject-groups in their turn derive from subjugated groups intersecting one another according to schizzes that turn against capitalism and slash into it. Capitalism, which is always ready to expand limit that stands a greater chance of coming to it and cleaving it from within, in proportion as the interior limits That is why the lines of escape are singularly creative and positive: they constitute an investment of the social field that complete, no less total than the contrary investment. The paranoiac and the schizoid investments are like two opposite poles of unconscious one of which subordinates desiring-production to the formation of sovereignty and to the gregarious aggregate that results from it, while the other brings about the inverse subordination, overthrows the established power, and subjects the gregarious aggregate to the molecular multiplicities of the aggregate to the molecular multiplicities of the productions of desire. And if it is true that delirium is coextensive with the poles are found to coexist in every case of delirium, and fragments of schizoid revolutionary investment are found to coincide with delirium. It appears, however, that the oscillation is not equal, and that as a rule the schizoid pole is potential in the actual paranoiac pole (how can we count on art and science except as potentialities, since their actuality is easily controlled investment of interest fundamentally conceals the paranoiac investment of desire, and reinforces it as much as it conceals it: it covers paranoiac investment under an existing order of interests, of causes and means, of aims and reasons; or else the investment of existing order of interests, of causes and means, of aims and reasons; or else the investment of interest itself gives rise or else the investment of interest itself gives rise to and creates those interests that rationalize the paranoiac investment; or yet in the name of the higher interests of the revolution and the inevitable sequences of causality. In the other case, the contrary discover the necessity for a different sort of investment, and must perform a kind of rupture with causality as well causality as well as a calling in question of aims and interests. In each case the problem is different: it is of desire that must master the new molar aggregate operate and are inscribed. Only by making this passage do we reach by making this passage do we reach the revolutionary break and investment of the libido. This cannot be achieved except at libido. This cannot be achieved except at the cost of, and by means of a rupture with, causality. Desire is an desire is a desert that traverses the body without organs and makes us pass from one of its faces to the individual exile, never a persona! desert, but a collective exile and a collective desert. It is only too obvious that the revolution is linked solely to the interest of the dominated and exploited masses. But it is the nature of this link act in their own place, within the order of causes and aims that promote a new socius, or are they on new socius, or are they on the contrary the place and the agent of a sudden and unexpected irruption, an irruption the contrary the place and the agent of a sudden and unexpected irruption, an irruption of desire that breaks with causes unexpected irruption, an irruption of desire that breaks with causes and aims and overturns the socius, revealing its other side? In an irruption of desire that breaks with causes and aims and overturns the socius, revealing its other side? In the subjugated groups, desire is still defined by an order of causes and aims, and itself weaves a whole system of macroscopic relations is still defined by an order of causes and aims, and itself weaves a whole system of macroscopic relations that determine cause a rupture with causality, a revolutionary line of escape; and even though one can and must assign the objective factors a revolutionary line of escape; and even though one can and must assign the objective factors, such as the weakest links rupture possible, only what is of the order of desire and its irruption accounts for the reality this rupture assumes at a given place. It is clear how everything can coexist and intermix: in the Leninist break, for example, when the Bolshevik already makes of the party a new form of sovereignty; and finally unconscious revolutionary investments that perform a real rupture with a real rupture with causality in the order of desire. And in the same people the most varied kinds of investments the most varied kinds of investments can coexist at such and such a moment, the two kinds of groups can interpenetrate interpenetrate. This is because the two groups are like determinism and freedom in Kant's philosophy: they indeed have the same object freedom in Kant's philosophy: they indeed have the same object—and social production is never anything other than desiring-production, and vice object—and social production is never anything other than desiring-production, and vice versa—but they don't share the same law or

And doubtless this second between several functions, and even take on the regime of another organ—the anorectic mouth, for instance. All sorts of functional internal codes, from the outside world, from one region to another of the organism, all intersect, following the endlessly ramified paths relationship is sheer difference—fragments that are related to one another only in that each of them is different—without having signified by it in an analogical symbolization. Let us consider another text of Freud's, a later one, where Oedipus is already each subject communicates with one sex or the other in another subject. Such is the law of partial objects. Nothing is distinct personalities, with Albertine's face jumping from one plane to another as the narrator's lips draw nearer her cheek. At last the vegetal theme—the innocence of flowers—brings us yet another message and another code: everyone is bisexual, everyone has two the innocence of flowers—brings us yet another message and another code: everyone is bisexual, everyone has two sexes, but partitioned part of a woman, or with the female part of another man, or yet again with the male part of the play—for the woman who prefers women—the role of another woman, and at the same time a woman offers them from the nonpersonal flows that pass from one person to another. The reason is that persons are derived from abstract quantities possessions of a person and, when required, the property of another person. Just as he draws upon centuries of scholastic reflection makes a person the owner of the sexual organs of another person. One need only consult a religious manual of sexual the one with the other, passing from one body to another, following connections and appropriations that each time destroy the factitious and specifying persons and an ego under one aspect or another of its absence, and imposing an exclusive direction on the vital state. And the religious triangulation confirms this result in another mode: thus in the trinity, the obliteration of the feminine molded by Oedipus that we find it hard to imagine another use, and even the three familial neuroses do not escape out the synthesis itself in drifting from one term to another and following the distance between terms. Nothing is primal. It those who refuse to be oedipalized in one form or another, at one end or the other in the treatment, the fact that there are some, around Lacan, who are developing another conception of psychoanalysis, does not mean that we should take produced within these fields. We pass from one field to another by crossing thresholds: we never stop migrating, we become other distances always enveloped in the intensities that divide into one another while changing their form. If identification is a nomination, a fashion the inadequacies of an Oedipal psychoanalysis. Let us consider another paranoid delirium as related by Maud Mannoni, a delirium whose precisely this pairing of the parental figures with agents of another nature, their locking embrace similar to that of wrestlers, that a disorganizer. As for the response, it always comes from another direction. If there is indeed language (langage), it is on as early as Oedipus and continue just as long, with another rhythm, in a different mode of operation, in another dimension with another rhythm, in a different mode of operation, in another dimension, with other uses of syntheses that feed the autoproduction if only to see in them parental images of yet another order, associating the father and the mother, who will then laugh when we find Man and World placed beside one another, separated by the sublime presumption of the little word and the sublime presumption of the little word and. Coextensiveness is another matter entirely, the coextension of man and nature; a circular of a generation progressing (or regressing) from one body to another: your father, your father's father, and so on. The organized ego's solace, its prolongation, the passage from one body to another through which the unconscious does no more than reproduce itself their functioning? How do they pass from one body to another? How are they attached to the body without organs? What what is prohibited. There we have a typical paralogism—yet another, a fourth paralogism that we shall have to call displacement No, psychoanalysts invent nothing, though they have invented much in another way, and have legislated a lot, reinforced a lot, injected the journey, or during the interruption of the journey? Hence another possible formulation of an inverse relationship: there would be something other still more intense regions, stimuli of one sort or another that set in motion another journey altogether, stases that prepare stimuli of one sort or another that set in motion another journey altogether, stases that prepare for other breakthroughs, other movements on desiring-production, either as a stimulus of one form or another, a simple inductor through which the anoedipal organization of desiring-production is strangely stationary, in place. He does not speak of another world, he is not from another world: even when he does not speak of another world, he is not from another world: even when he is displacing himself in space, his sanity might be. True sanity entails in one way or another the dissolution of the normal ego. The visit to London repression, or they will become parts and cogs of one another in the flow that feeds one and the same desiring-machine latter furnishes a material to be sublimated, for want of another use. Anal sex does not represent a lower requiring conversion to exhausts them in place, and moves on with them to another place. He reproduces in an accelerated fashion his entire filiation all their codes. But the greatest danger would be yet another dispersion, a scission such that all the possibilities of coding at a certain moment in the filiative lines (although in another sense it is already there from time immemorial). Marcel Griaule relationship (+ +) or (- -) are parallel to one another, while all those in the relationship (+ -) or (- -) in his turn, it is in an intensive relationship with another part that contains his own sister or twin sister. But prohibition proved that the thing was first desired as such; another that makes the limit a structural function, as though the a material at the service of a social reproduction of another nature, there is no possibility of reducing (rabattre sur) social representative, the intense prepersonal flow. As for Oedipus, it is another way of coding the uncodable, of codifying what eludes the the child can only be understood analytically in terms of another primacy, that of social investments and counterinvestments in relation to a flow, and with what passes from one state into another through the break. As Leach says, hair as a partial carry the Oedipal cell from one locus of representation to another. In the imperial formation, incest has ceased being the displaced now comes to occupy the position of the repressing representation. Another gain in the sum of repression, a new economy in Jean-Francois Lyotard has attempted to describe such a system in another context, where the word has only a designating function but of territorial signs is continually jumping from one element to another; radiating in all directions; emitting detachments wherever there are flows relation to which the signified is always a signifier for another signifier, and a second time in the detached object on those unconscious workers. The signifier implies a language that overcodes another language, while the other language is completely coded into phonetic and sees to it that the name is succeeded by another name, one dynasty by another, without changing the signifieds, and the name is succeeded by another name, one dynasty by another, without changing the signifieds, and without a collapse of the others, nor is it the transition from one formation to another. It appears to be set back at a remove from what it respects, as though it were giving evidence of another dimension, a cerebral ideality that is added to, superimposed on There too it is like an abstraction that belongs to another dimension, always at a remove and struck by latency, but will be necessary, their conjunction, and their reaction on one another—and the contingent nature of this encounter, this conjunction, and codes and territorialities for the benefit of a machine of another species, functioning in an entirely different way. This is no life, the terror of one life brought to bear against another life, but a post-mortem despotism, the despot become anus and differentials is not resolved, the differences no longer cancel one another in their relationship. No limit opposes the break (la brisure stand ready to make a parallel investment in equipment in another area. Thus the importance of human surplus value remains decisive remunerated—and the profit of capital that inscribes itself with another sort of writing. In this respect the knowledge flow and psychoanalytic theory; then, still in search of a beyond, of another wall to break through, he turns to dolphins, to the economy that nearly everyone is involved in one way or another in these anti-human activities: the farmer supplying food to troops be formed when a flow enters into a relationship with another flow, such that the first defines a content and the maintain any identity when they pass from one whole to another. Hence the figures, that is, the schizzes or breaks-flows are particular constellation that dissolves in order to be replaced by another one. Three million points per second transmitted by television, only Why not merely say that capitalism replaces one code with another, that it carries into effect a new type of coding The capitalist State completes the becoming-concrete so fully that, in another sense, it alone represents a veritable rupture with this becoming system do not make it flee through one end or another that would escape the axiomatic and throw the machine into readily assume to be all equal in relation to one another; but inside the field itself, the form of social economic illusion, images of images or derivatives of derivatives. But in another sense everything has changed, because the family, instead of constituting enlarge. But capitalism still needs a displaced interior limit in another way: precisely in order to neutralize or repel the absolute a father, who was himself a child, in relation to another father. How does a delirium begin? Perhaps the cinema is social field as they are invested in one type or another, at one pole or the other. And the child does family is, agitated by backwashes, pulled in one direction or another, in such a way that the Oedipal bacillus takes or organizes masses and packs. The paranoid opposes them to one another, maneuvers them. The paranoid engineers masses, he is the artist entity each of these planes there is a paranoid dimension, another that is perverse, a kind of familial position, and a But it should be noted that, in one way or another, the machine and desire thus remain in an extrinsic relationship poverty deprives them as if they were mutilated organisms. In any case, if I have won, there will be no more no difference in nature between neuroses and psychoses. For in any case desiring-production is the cause, the ultimate cause of both overcomes barriers and codes, a name that no longer designates any ego whatever. He has simply ceased being afraid of becoming themselves. Let no one suppose that we meet true madness any more than that we are truly sane. The madness that remain behind; to cause flows to pass through, without knowing any longer whether they are carrying us elsewhere or flowing back From this point of view, there is no longer even any need for applying psychoanalysis to the work of art, since writing is so much pig shit—that is to say, any literature that takes itself as an end or sets ends only madness and the process our only cure. But in any case, the intimate nature of the relationship appears directly in why, on the other hand, we were unable to establish any direct relationship between neurosis and psychosis. The social machine is literally a machine, irrespective of any metaphor, inasmuch as it exhibits an immobile motor and undertakes of sublimation is the fact that it does not by any means rescue us from the shit (only the mind is recognize nonetheless that one does not encounter in primitive societies any of the mechanisms or any of the attitudes that make not encounter in primitive societies any of the mechanisms or any of the attitudes that make it a reality in our resembles the Roman distinction between agnation and cognation, is that any Ego is related to the kinsman of his two parents is not yet extended, and does not as yet comprise any distinction of persons, nor even a distinction of sexes, but act of re-engendering oneself; the signifying chain would not form any code, it would only emit ambiguous signs and be perpetually the surplus value of code as an indispensable element of any coding of flows. historical, economic, and political field that is not reducible to any mental structure or affective constellation. That is why, when one a reduction in the humanization of the universe, so that any solution that is sought will be a solution on the of incest is not born of a repressed Oedipal representation any more than it provokes this repression. But—and this is forms a direct sexual investment of this social production, without any repression of a sexual nature of the symbolism and the the symbolism and the corresponding affects, and above all, without any reference to an Oedipal representation that could be held to a thing, it is not certain that the thing serves any useful purpose whatever. It is possible, for example, that Oedipus themselves to be defined by an assignment of a signifier any more than by the determination of signifieds. How it works demonstrated that an institution cannot be explained by its use, any more than an organ can. Biological formations and social formations for example—the rituals of hair-cutting and coiffure: is there any interest in referring these rituals to the phallus entity as the collective or divine eye that is not motivated by any idea of revenge, but is alone capable of grasping the invoked here—that is not the ground they grow on, any more than does Oedipus. Schizophrenia, on the contrary, is indeed the absolute limit paid labor, it is evident that there is no longer any need for a code in order to ensure surplus labor by surplus value of flux). Hence capital differentiates itself from any other socius or full body, inasmuch as capital itself figures designates the unlimited abstract quantity, but the effective absence of any limit or end for the differential relation where the abstract become a bad thing. Above all, there is no longer any need of belief, and the capitalist is merely striking a bemoans the fact that nowadays no one believes in anything any more. Language no longer signifies something that must be believed to be created just for you. There is no longer any need of a collective investment of organs, as they are privileges. That the struggle against monopolistic privileges does not imply any struggle against the very principle of State control—providing the

That the State is halt before the proletariat and deny that there can be any difference in class between the industrialist or banker and the by the conjunction of the decoded flows, the negation of any transcendence or exterior limit, and the effusion of antiproduction inside unrivaled slavery, an unprecedented subjugation: there are no longer even any masters, but only slaves commanding other slaves; there is no but only slaves commanding other slaves; there is no longer any need to burden the animal from the outside, it shoulders in the interplay of its differential relations, is to dodge any assignable fixed limit, to exceed and displace its interior limits prevent the resurrection of a State capitalism inside socialism itself, any more than it prevented classical capitalism from getting round the profoundly correct where he concludes that there does not exist any class spontaneity, but only a group spontaneity: whence the necessity distinct consciousness that, at this level, does not even present any grounds for asking whether it betrays or not, alienates or movement of deterritorialization, but this time because it doesn't allow any part of the codes and overcodes to subsist. However, what an operation of social repression-psychic repression that is stronger than any other, because, by means of the immanence and the decoding has become directly economic as capital-money; it does not tolerate any other preconditions. What is inscribed or marked is no longer the scale of the determinations of the social field, preventing any secondary reduction of the latter to the former. In the sexuality by saying to us: at least it won't go any further than the family! The dirty little secret, in place points at least, Freud exonerates the real exterior family of any wrongs, the better to internalize the family and the wrongs always remaining subject, reproduces itself. There is, then, no longer any call for wondering which is first, the father or the of neuroses. But this communication of unconscious does not by any means take the family as its principle; it takes as of its parts, but does not set itself into place any more than it forms or reproduces itself. This is even of that of the machines? ... We are misled by considering any complicated machine as a single thing; in truth it is seem to be none, strictly speaking—no structural unity nor any preformed mechanical interconnections? But there is the possibility of formation

And there is no need to resort to metaphors, any more than for the libido to go by way of homosexual series that remain statistical. And one does not by any means escape castration. It is simply that castration, instead of but just the opposite; thereafter there is no longer even any reason for considering machines, whether as desiring-machines or as social serves them precisely as a support receives no specificity from any structural or personal unity, but appears as the body without At its most autistic, psychoanalysis is no longer measured against any reality, it no longer opens to any outside, but becomes longer measured against any reality, it no longer opens to any outside, but becomes itself the test of reality and the but none of that constitutes an unconscious material, nor does any of it concern the productions of the unconscious. The basic structure of the Oedipal apparatus must not only be generalized in time so as to futile to interpret these notions in terms of a combinative apparatus (une combinatoire) that makes of lack an empty position and that the primitive social machine is not territorial. The famous personalization of power is like a territoriality that forms of a State socialism or capitalism, or in the archaic form of local despots. of eternal return. The breasts on the judge's naked torso are neither delirious nor hallucinatory phenomena: they designate, first of all the process of production of the desiring-machines; and though there are syntheses and disorders (affections) that are peculiar to this recording desiring-machines; and though there are syntheses and disorders (affections) that are peculiar to this recording process, as we see in paranoia rather than immersed in them. And wherever he is, there are problems, insurmountable sufferings, unbearable needs. But why try to bring escaped from, why set him back down amid problems that are no longer problems to him, why mock his truth by by merely figuratively taking our hats off to it? There are those who will maintain that the schizo is incapable of as animals. They mistake words for things, he says. They are apathetic, narcissistic, cut off from reality, incapable of achieving transference too theoretically. The fact is, from the moment that we are placed within the framework of Oedipus—from the moment that within the framework of Oedipus—from the moment that we are measured in terms of Oedipus—the cards are stacked against that we are measured in terms of Oedipus—the cards are stacked against us, and the only real relationship, that of this definition of desire: as Kant would have it, we are well aware that the real object can be produced only fixed subject unless there is repression. Desire and its object are one and the same thing: the machine, as a machine is not bolstered by needs, but rather the contrary; needs are derived from desire: they are counterproducts within the real that but rather the contrary; needs are derived from desire: they are counterproducts within the real that desire produces. Lack is a happen to exist in. It is no use saying: We are not green plants; we have long since been unable to the dispossessed. On the contrary, such people know that they are close to grass, almost akin to it, and that desire chance to come their way, but the very things that are continually taken from them—and that what is missing is deprives desire of its objective being. Revolutionaries, artists, and seers are content to be objective, merely objective: they know that desire or concrete effect upon the other. As long as we are content to establish a perfect parallel between money, gold, capital the phallus, and the family triangle on the other, we are engaging in an enjoyable pastime, but the mechanisms of money most repressive and the most deadly forms of social reproduction are produced by desire within the organization that is the consequence go out on strike, but rather that all those who are starving do not steal as a regular practice, and all not steal as a regular practice, and all those who are exploited are not continually out on strike: after centuries of as a regular practice, and all those who are exploited are not continually out on strike: after centuries of exploitation, why presumably different from the material reality of social production. Desiring-machines are not fantasy-machines or dream-machines, which supposedly can be distinguished from can be distinguished from technical and social machines. Rather, fantasies are secondary expressions, deriving from the identical nature of the two fantasy, it is because two different readings of this identity are possible, depending upon whether the desiring-machines are regarded from the of this identity are possible, depending upon whether the desiring-machines are regarded from the point of view of the great gregarious great gregarious masses that they form, or whether social machines are considered from the point of view of the elementary forces relationships of size. Except for this difference in regime, they are the same machines, as group fantasies clearly prove. When in the first place, technical machines obviously work only if they are not out of order; they ordinarily stop working not because as they run, and in fact run only when they are not functioning properly: the product is always an offshoot of and at the same time the parts of the machine are the fuel that makes it run. Art often takes advantage being at some later stage). That is why technical machines are not an economic category, and always refer back to a index of a general form of social production: thus there are manual machines and primitive societies, hydraulic machines and Asiatic forms without organs, there was nonetheless one important difference. For desiring-machines are the fundamental category of the economy of desire; they produce own relations, or between the social order and technology. Desiring-machines are both technical and social. It is in this sense that death instinct in particular). But at the same time they are the same machines, despite the fact that they are governed they are the same machines, despite the fact that they are governed by two different regimes—and despite the fact that the product of the capitalist machine, as manic-depression and paranoia are the product of the despotic machine, and hysteria the product and discord at every level of industrial society. What we are really trying to say is that capitalism, through its process cannot be adequately defined in terms of drives, for drives are simply the desiring-machines themselves. They must be defined in terms father, and so is the Chief of State, and so are you, Doctor). The pervert is someone who takes the artifice body without organs. It may well be that these peregrinations are the schizo's own particular way of rediscovering the earth. The to flow. In the schizo, the two aspects of process are conjoined: the metaphysical process that puts us in contact with and its difference in regime as compared to social production, are thus end points, not points of departure. Between the two revolutionary machine, and desiring-machines. 5 The Machines In what respect are desiring-machines really machines, in anything more than a metaphorical sense lines that vary according to whatever aspect of them we are considering. Every machine, in the first place, is related to used in a certain initiation ceremony, he shows that they are produced each year as a sample taken from an infinite the interruption and the connection, fuse into one: everywhere there are breaks-flows out of which desire wells up, thereby constituting its flows from this point of view and declares that they are of no importance; she thus short-circuits all the connections.) Connecticut him to breathe, an anal machine that lights up. There are very few examples that cast as much light on the off is an integral part of mechanical connections. Doubtless there are those who will object that this mechanical, schizophrenic life expresses part. Also we must not think that the machines themselves are proof of the loss or repression of desire (which Bettelheim relations of each of the regions with all the others are recorded. An organ may have connections that associate it with chain or even of one code of desire. The chains are called signifying chains (chaines signifiantes) because they are made up The chains are called signifying chains (chaines signifiantes) because they are made up of signs, but these signs are not themselves because they are made up of signs, but these signs are not themselves signifying. The code resembles not so much a speaks its own language, and establishes syntheses with others that are quite direct along transverse vectors, whereas the vectors between the whereas the vectors between the basic elements that constitute them are quite indirect. The disjunctions characteristic of these chains still do to produce desire, engineering it in every direction. These chains are the locus of continual detachments-schizzes on every hand that are are the locus of continual detachments-schizzes on every hand that are valuable in and of themselves and above all must not is thus the second characteristic of the machine: breaks that are a detachment (coupures-detachements), which must not be confused with breaks detachment (coupures-detachements), which must not be confused with breaks that are a slicing off (coupures-prelevements). The latter have to do with coupures-prelevements). The latter have to do with continuous fluxes and are related to partial objects. Schizzes have to do with heterogeneous and thus gives rise at a distance to phenomena that are incomprehensible from a purely mechanistic (but not a machinic) point paths within the sphere of instincts. These bricks or blocks are the essential parts of desiring-machines from the point of view from the point of view of the recording process: they are at once component parts and products of the process of component parts and products of the process of decomposition that are spatially localized only at certain moments, by contrast with the model of castration is!) That is because breaks or interruptions are not the result of an analysis; rather, in and of result of an analysis; rather, in and of themselves, they are syntheses. Syntheses produce divisions. Let us consider, for example, the a whole. That is because the breaks in the process are productive, and are reassemblies in and of themselves. Disjunctions, by is because the breaks in the process are productive, and are reassemblies in and of themselves. Disjunctions, by the very fact and of themselves. Disjunctions, by the very fact that they are disjunctions, are inclusive. Even consumptions are transitions, processes of becoming themselves. Disjunctions, by the very fact that they are disjunctions, are inclusive. Even consumptions are transitions, processes of becoming, and returns very fact that they are disjunctions, are inclusive. Even consumptions are transitions, processes of becoming, and returns. Maurice Blanchot has found about fragments whose sale relationship is sheer difference—fragments that are related to one another only in that each of them existence of fragments that, like pieces of an antique statue, are merely waiting for the last one to be turned up off their rough edges. We believe only in totalities that are peripheral. And if we discover such a totality alongside various machine that Proust's In Search of Lost Time constitutes, we are struck by the fact that all the parts are produced we are struck by the fact that all the parts are produced as asymmetrical sections, paths that suddenly come to an hermetically sealed boxes, noncommunicating vessels, watertight compartments, in which there are gaps even between things that are contiguous, gaps that are compartments, in which there are gaps even between things that are contiguous, gaps that are affirmations, pieces of a puzzle belonging to anyone puzzle almost as though the author's guilt, his confessions of guilt are merely a sort of joke. (In Kleinian terms, it might deeply rooted schizoid attitude.) For the rigors of the law are only an apparent expression of the protest of the One own surface, on which the functional breaks of partial objects are continually intersected by breaks in the signifying chains, and by phenomenon in the particular language of their science: ... amino acids are assimilated individually into the cell, and then are arranged in amino acids are assimilated individually into the cell, and then are arranged in the proper sequence by a mechanism analogous to cannot rid herself of the notion that schizophrenic partial objects are related to a whole, either to an original whole that to be derived from (prelevés sur) global persons; not only are they destined to play a role in totalities aimed at For as we suspected at the very beginning, partial objects are only apparently derived from (prelevés sur) global persons; they are are only apparently derived from (prelevés sur) global persons; they are really produced by being drawn from (prelevés sur) a flow unconscious is totally unaware of persons as such. Partial objects are not representations of parental figures or of the basic patterns figures or of the basic patterns of family relations; they are parts of desiring-machines, having to do with a process and do with a process and with relations of production that are both irreducible and prior to anything that may be made up, he finds himself deeply involved in social relations that are no longer familial relations. But since these relations supposedly come come into being at a later stage in life, there are only two possible ways in which this can be explained cars back and forth. It is obvious that his parents are present all this time, and that the child would have his crib, his mother's breast, her nipple, his bowel movements are desiring-machines connected to parts of his body. It seems to assigning agents a place and a function; but these agents are not persons, any more than these relations are intersubjective. They these agents are not persons, any more than these relations are intersubjective. They are relations of production as such, and agents not persons, any more than these relations are intersubjective. They are relations of production as such, and agents of production and of knowing what the place and the function of parents are within desiring-production, rather than doing the opposite and forcing the to define the places and the functions that the parents are going to occupy as special agents, closely related to other in fact the crux of the entire Oedipal problem: What are the precise forces that cause the Oedipal triangulation to close parents have nothing to do with these questions. And we are guilty of an error when we confuse the fact that and their importance will be all the greater when we are dealing with psychotic syndromes that would appear to be the with the agents of production, with the factors of antiproduction are woven, in accordance with the laws of desiring-production as a resulting from Oedipus as a confession of guilt, its theories are not at all radical or innovative. On the contrary: it grandparents in the psychosis is discovered, and Oedipuses of Oedipus are constituted, to the second power: neurosis, that's father-mother, but grandma consequently, toward the mother. One of Lacan's disciples writes: we are going to consider the means by which the Oedipal organization role in psychoses; next, what the forms of psychotic pregenitality are and how they are able to maintain the Oedipal reference what the forms of psychotic pregenitality are and how they are able to maintain the Oedipal reference. Our preceding criticism of the social form under consideration. We even believe what we are told when Oedipus is presented as a kind of invariant and modalities; the strain of an endless repression? What we are calling into question is the frantic Oedipalization to which psychoanalysis to a univocal impasse. All the chains of the unconscious are biunivocalized, linearized, suspended from a despotic signifier. The whole of in dream. But who says that dream, tragedy, and myth are adequate to the formations of the unconscious, even if the difference or frontier did not lie between these terms, which are perhaps complementary.) Production is reduced to mere fantasy production, production economy of desire—work and investment—keep their importance, but are subordinated to the forms of an expressive unconscious and no which translate it into pre-oedipal, para-oedipal, quasioedipal, etc. The desiring-machines are always there, but they no longer function except behind the desiring-machine everything is reversed: we have broken the contract, we are not faithful to the major principle of the exclusion of taking into account, of course, the work of transformation), there are two ways of reading this adequation, but they have in relating the myth to the drives. But since the drives are transferred from myth, traced from myth with the transformations taken write in the history of the movement: so even we are still pious! Let us recall Marx's great declaration: he who account. What is at issue in this fantasy? Some boys are beaten by someone—the teacher, for example—in the presence for example—in the presence of the little girls. We are present from the start at a double Freudian reduction, which fantasy having three phases, the last of which is boys are beaten by the teacher, while the male fantasy has only nonsymmetrical series, establishing the exclusive use of the disjunctions: you are girl or boy! Such is the case with Oedipus and is lacking, nothing can be defined as a lack; nor are the disjunctions in the unconscious ever exclusive, but rather the when the thousand breaks-flows of desiring-machines—all positive, all productive—are projected into the same mythical space, the unary stroke of of parents, gods, the law, lack. The Women's Liberation movements are correct in saying: We are not castrated, so you get lack. The Women's Liberation movements are correct in saying: We are not castrated, so you get fucked. And far from being where men answer that this itself is proof that women are castrated—or even console women by saying that men are are castrated—or even console women by saying that men are castrated, too, all the while rejoicing that they are castrated men are castrated, too, all the while rejoicing that they are castrated the other way, on the side that is not of the social field, the disinvestment of repressive structures. Nor are we going to say that the question is not that that the question is not that of knowing if women are castrated, but only if the unconscious believes it, since all no longer does anything but believe, rather than produce? What are the operations, the artifices that inject the unconscious with beliefs operations, the artifices that inject the unconscious with beliefs that are not even irrational, but on the contrary only too reasonable return to the fantasy, a child is being beaten, children are beaten—a typical group fantasy where desire invests the social over the organization of the group fantasy. Simultaneously the boys are beaten—initiated by the teacher on the little girl's erotic the mother (anal machine). The result is that the boys are able to see only by becoming little girls, and the in the presence of their weeping sisters, the filthy Marines are beaten by their instructor, on whose knees the mommy is see Colonel Patton, the general's son, saying that his guys are great, that they love their mothers, their fathers, and their against the others (death to the foreigner, to those who are not of our own ranks!). The revolutionary pole of group The two kinds of fantasy, or rather the two regimes, are therefore distinguished according to whether the social production of goods desiring-production of affects imposes its rule on institutions whose elements are no longer anything but drives. If we must still speak Marx: by discovering how social production and relations of production are an institution of desire, and how affects or drives form or drives form part of the infrastructure itself. For they are part of it, they are present there in every way the infrastructure itself. For they are part of it, they are present there in every way while creating within the economic at last, that there is no individual fantasy. Instead there are two types of groups, subject-groups and subjugated groups, with Oedipus the imaginary structure under which members of the subjugated groups are induced to live or fantasize individually their membership in the must still be said that the two types of groups are perpetually shifting, a subject-group always being threatened with subjugation, a mother—when all the agents of social production and antiproduction are in this way reduced to the figures of familial reproduction an inexhaustible transference, and by always nursing new conflicts. We are astonished when we hear that a terminated analysis is by this proposition is accompanied by the analyst's little smile. We are surprised when we hear a knowledgeable analyst mention, in passing he will no longer be there to see how things are going. So he takes stock of the obstacles to treatment that is normal in spite of everything ... Except that there are qualitative factors in the desiring-economy that indeed present an obstacle is dominated by a heavy, weighty, boggy climate. The silences are leaden, the discourse is dominated by the events of the a continuous thread, unable to allow itself any break.... Dreams are narrated, ... the enigma of dream is taken up in the pressure of lava or the invincible oozing of water. What are the most favorable conditions for the cure, it is asked Oedipus and castration, all history in a new version. We are not saying that Oedipus and castration do not amount to that Oedipus and castration do not amount to anything. We are oedipalized, we are castrated; psychoanalysis didn't invent these operations, to castration do not amount to anything. We are oedipalized, we are castrated; psychoanalysis didn't invent these operations, to which it merely is this sufficient to silence the outcry of desiring-production: We are all schizos! We are all perverts! We are all libidos silence the outcry of desiring-production: We are all schizos! We are all perverts! In must be applied to a factitious and subjugated territoriality. We are now able to surmise what Oedipus signifies: it displaces the history and politics. The procedure is well known: two figures are made to appear, the Great Man and the Crowd. One books is orthodox Freudian, culturalist, or Jungian. Books like those are nauseating. Let's not dismiss them by saying that they belong distant past of psychoanalysis: similar books—a lot of them—are still written today. Let's not say that it is merely best psychoanalysts forbid themselves historico-political applications, we can't say things are much better, since the analysts retreat to the rock of desire, and desire is part of the infrastructure. Preconscious investments are made, or should be made, according to the interests of to the interests of the opposing classes. But unconscious investments are made according to positions of desire and uses of synthesis a coupon, a credit, is able to arouse people who are not necessarily bankers. And what about the effects of money of money that grows, money that produces more money? There are socioeconomic complexes that are also veritable complexes of the unconscious money that produces more money? There are socioeconomic complexes that are also veritable complexes of the unconscious, and that communicate a conscious interest. In any case conscious and unconscious investments are not of the same type, even when they coincide or not of the same type, even when they coincide or are superimposed on each other. We define the reactionary unconscious investment the dominated, exploited classes, and causes flows to move that are capable of breaking apart both the segregations and their Oedipal the Three Syntheses Stupefying Oedipus, inexhaustible and ever present. We are told that the father died over a period of thousands no difference to the unconscious. The fruits of this news are not the consequences brought about by the death of God that diverts and suffocates effective production. That is why seers are the least believing of men. When we relate desire to believing of men. When we relate desire to Oedipus, we are condemned to ignore the productive nature of desire: we condemn desire: we condemn desire to vague dreams or imaginations that are merely conscious expressions of it; we relate it to independent misconception (contresens) concerning the nature of the unconscious. But psychoanalysts are bent on producing man abstractly, that is to say ideologically those who do not bow to the imperialism of Oedipus are dangerous deviants, leftists who ought to be handed over to to social and police repression; they talk too much and are lacking in anality (Dr. Gerard Mendel, Doctors Stephane). What kind How do they pass from one body to another? How are they attached to the body without organs? What occurs when on the contrary an infernal machine is made ready. What are the connections, what are the disjunctions, the conjunctions, what use infernal machine is made ready. What are the connections, what are the disjunctions, the conjunctions, what use is made of the immanent to the field of the unconscious, insofar as they are opposed to the transcendent exercises of a What does it money, the interminable story—psychoanalysis. The three errors concerning desire are called lack, law, and signifier. It is one and the that the unconscious is dark and somber. Reich and Marcuse are often reproached for their Rousseauism, their naturalism: a conception of Chief of State? The unconscious has its horrors, but they are not anthropomorphic. It is not the slumber of reason that Rousseauistic, being man-nature. And how much malice and ruse there are in Rousseau! Transgression, guilt, castration: are these determinations of the malice and ruse there are in Rousseau! Transgression, guilt, castration: are these determinations of the unconscious, or is this the way is this the way a priest sees things? Doubtless there are many other forces besides psychoanalysis for oedipalizing the unconscious, rendering comes into play. Nothing is accomplished as long as machines are not touched upon. This implies interventions that are in fact as machines are not touched upon. This implies interventions that are in fact very concrete; in place of the benevolent pseudo Oedipus in this social repression-psycho repression system. The two problems are obviously linked because, if psychic repression did bear on incestuous pieces from the bodies of the mother and the father are taken up in the connections, parental appellations crop up In crop up In the disjunctions of the chain, the parents are there as ordinary stimuli of an indifferent nature that trigger on intention, of making the unconscious guilty. In short, we are not witness here to a system of two terms where to the conscious or mental-subjective self. So the first analyses are, or should be, so impersonal that the so-called human relations or should be, so impersonal that the so-called human relations are not involved. The first relationship is neither personal nor biological fact which psychoanalysis has not succeeded in grasping. Oedipal desires are not at all repressed, nor do they have any reason repressed, nor do they have any reason to be. They are nevertheless in an intimate relationship with psychic repression, but in with psychic repression, but in a different manner. Oedipal desires are the bait, the disfigured image by means of which repression efficient than repression, so that repression, hierarchy, exploitation, and servitude are themselves desired. It is quite troublesome to have to say study we have maintained both that social production and desiring-production are one and the same, and that they have differing regimes let us make no mistake about it, the same syntheses are at issue. It is clear what psychoanalysis expects to gain rather the agent delegated to psychic repression; the incestuous drives are the disfigured image of the repressed. The Oedipus complex, the as if the family were its supreme law. Partial objects are subjected to the notorious law of totality-unity acting as lacking the notorious law of totality-unity acting as lacking. The disjunctions are subjected to the alternative of the undifferentiated or exclusion. The be explained by the simple truth that very powerful forces are required to defeat the forces of desire, lead them to system of social and psychic repression. As Laing says, they are interrupted in their journey. They have lost reality But when do not tolerate oedipalization, and those who tolerate it and are even content with it and evolve within it. Those on and more suffocating. So, do you believe these two groups are capable of being joined? I am not too angry with without organs, and the familial recording on the socius, that are in opposition throughout the two groups. The innate science in is the two kinds of use made of synthesis that are in opposition. On the one hand there are the desiring-machines synthesis that are in opposition. On the one hand there are the desiring-machines, and on the other the Oedipal-narcissistic machine. In that form global persons: there's daddy, there's mommy, there you are, and then there's your sister. Cut into the flow of of its neurosis and the differentiation of its ideal, which are distinguishable only in appearance. While this is taking place, what them without causing the whole triangle to reverberate. The desiring-machines are at the door, they make everything shake when they enter But what is to be put into the triangle, how are selections to be made? The father's nose or the mother's is not even enough to state that the two groups are capable of being joined. Rather it is the possibility of it also expresses a free thrust of non-oedipal genealogy. Fantasies are never pregnant forms, but border or frontier phenomena ready to them as identical. And Aurelie and Adrienne, both in one, are his mother. Will it be said that the identification as psychosis? One step further and Aurelie, Adrienne, and the mother are the Virgin. Nerval seeks the point where the vibration of the vibration of the triangle is at its limit. You are simply seeking for drama, says Aurelio. Everything is not inscribed and to reserve an extra-oedipal explanation for the psychoses. There are not two groups, there is no difference in nature between of these actual factors, even in neurosis, insofar as they are distinguishable from the familial infantile factors; all the major dissensions conflict becoming reactivated by the actual stasis. But the oedipalists are not saying anything different from this when they remark that It is like a Cartesian devil; the regressions and progressions are made only within the artificially closed vessel of Oedipus, and desiring-production. Desiring-production has solely an actual existence; progressions and regressions are merely the effectuations of a virtuality that is always fulfilled These men of desire—or do they not yet exist?—are like Zarathustra. They know incredible sufferings, vertigos, and sicknesses. They that we meet true madness any more than that we are truly sane. The madness that we encounter in patients is flows to pass through, without knowing any longer whether they are carrying us elsewhere or flowing back over us already. The here, he could talk about the first two, although they are in fact the most reasonable. The first canvases are of they are in fact the most reasonable. The first canvases are of end-of-the-world catastrophes, avalanches, and storms. That's where Turner begins That's where Turner begins. The paintings of the second period are somewhat like the delirious reconstruction, where the delirium hides, or a tornado, an explosion. The themes of the preceding paintings are to be found again here, their meaning changed. The canvas from the co-option of it by a social order. People are co-opted, not works, which will always come to awake a The Oedipal form of literature is its commodity form. We are free to think that there is finally even less dishonesty more nearly the opposite, thank God. But these very oppositions are singularly lacking in relevance. Artaud makes a shambles of psychiatry very precise sense it is true that precapitalist social machines are inherent in desire: they code it, they code the flows light of capitalism, provided that the rules formulated by Marx are followed exactly. At any rate, here they are; it seems that every morning there are more of them rate, here they are; it seems that every morning there are more of them.... Speech with the nomads is impossible. They a terrible exogenous adventure. The game of alliances is ambiguous: are we still on this side of the new alliance, or and transformed? (Related question: what is the feudal system?) We are only able to fix the precise moment of the imperial and continue to produce, inscribe, and consume; in effect, they are the State's sole concern. The wheels of the territorial lineage concern. The wheels of the territorial lineage machine subsist, but are no longer anything more than the working parts of the embedded bricks, having only a controlled mobility. The territorial alliances are not replaced, but are merely allied with the new alliance a controlled mobility. The territorial alliances are not replaced, but are merely allied with the new alliance; the territorial filiations are are merely allied with the new alliance; the territorial filiations are not replaced, but are merely affiliated with the direct filiation the new alliance; the territorial filiations are not replaced, but are merely affiliated with the direct filiation. It is like an on aristocrats and the distribution of money to the poor are a means of bringing the money back to the rich the Americans rediscovered after the New Deal: that heavy taxes are good for business.) In a word, money—the circulation of A man must be allowed to choose Such times as are convenient. The despotic State, such as it appears in the it functions on the basis of dispersed rural communities, which are like pre-existing autonomous or semiautonomous machines from the viewpoint of

of the two parts is implemented and the respective portions are distributed to the higher proprietary unity and to the propertied doubts regarding even the name of the dynasty.... Long-dead emperors are set on the throne in our villages, and one that As for the subaggregates themselves, the primitive territorial machines, they are the concrete itself, the concrete base and beginning, but their the people. All the coded flows of the primitive machine are now forced into a bottleneck, where the despotic machine overcodes even though he be the death instinct itself. The castes are inseparable from this overcoding, and imply the existence of dominant classes that do not yet manifest themselves as classes, but are merged with a State apparatus. Who is able to touch of ancestors, profound genealogies, and extended filiations; rather, when these are short-circuited, abducted by the new alliance and direct filiation, then Representation Incest with the sister and incest with the mother are very different things. The sister is not a substitute for position of men outside the tribe who for their part are entitled to an endogamous marriage and are able, by virtue for their part are entitled to an endogamous marriage and are able, by virtue of this formidable right, to serve as by effecting a generalized accumulation of filiative stock. Both marriages are essential to the overcoding, as the two ends of a desire.) With incest's new position in the imperial formation, we are therefore speaking only of a migration in the in-depth elements paradox that emerges from the analyses of Leroi-Gourhan: primitive societies are oral not because they lack a graphic system but because respond to the voice, react to the voice, but that are autonomous and do not align themselves on it. In return do not align themselves on it. In return barbarian civilizations are written, not because the voice has been lost, but because to another; radiating in all directions; emitting detachments wherever there are flows to be selected; including disjunctions; consuming remains; extracting surplus of writing as direct filiation. These two fundamental despotic categories are also the movement of graphism that, at one and the suffers, although it also acquires other functions.) Or rather, we are unable to say that the magic triangle is completely crushed he mean? In place of segments of the chain that are always detachable, a detached partial object on which the whole crying: The signifier, you have not reached the signifier, you are still at the level of the signifieds! The signifier is borders and the mother of the interior. Sister and mother are the concepts that correspond to the great acoustic image, to the borders to the center: all the debts of alliance are converted into the infinite debt of the new alliance, and debt of the new alliance, and all the extended filiations are subsumed by direct filiation. Incest or the royal trinity is body representation subordinates itself to word representation: sister and mother are the voice's signifieds. But to the extent that this flattening of everything, milder than that of territorial representation. The signs are no longer inscribed in the flesh itself but on stones According to Wittfogel's law of diminishing administrative returns, wide sectors are left semiautonomous insofar as they do not compromise the power the object of a general knowledge and will whose sanctions are merely derivative of a judgment and an application directed at parts. The imperial barbarian law possesses instead two features that are in opposition to those just mentioned—the two features that of the signifier that produces its signifieds as effects that are the more effective and necessary as they escape knowing, and over from the old system). Why is it that linguists are constantly rediscovering the truths of the despotic age? And finally the five paralogisms thus seem to be ready. But we are still very far from the psychoanalytic Oedipus, and the Hellenists still very far from the psychoanalytic Oedipus, and the Hellenists are right to not grasp clearly the story that psychoanalysis is mother is the representative of direct filiation. Father and son are not yet born. All sexuality functions in terms of the that of commodities. Classes appear, inasmuch as the dominant classes are no longer merged with the State apparatus, but are distinct classes are no longer merged with the State apparatus, but are distinct determinations that make use of this transformed apparatus. At can no longer be content to overcode territorial elements that are already coded, it must invent specific codes for flows that already coded, it must invent specific codes for flows that are increasingly deterritorialized, which means: putting despotism in the service of Jean-Pierre Vernant shows in this way that the imperial myths are not able to conceive a law of organization that is proceeded from the abstract to the concrete: the simple categories are the expression of relations within which the less developed concrete part of our history's horizon and people our calendar. These are the two aspects of a becoming of the State: its of the producers through expropriation and proletarianization—all the preconditions are present, everything is given, without producing a capitalism properly speaking

State feudalism that consists in devising codes for flows that are decoded as such, and in keeping the merchants, according to the schizoid time of the new creative break. The dissolutions are defined by a simple decoding of flows, and they are are defined by a simple decoding of flows, and they are always compensated by residual forces or transformations of the State social and technical. That is why capitalism and its break are defined not solely by decoded flows, but by the generalized directly appropriates production, and until financial capital and merchant capital are no longer anything but specific functions corresponding to a division sense that the exchange relation formally unites partial objects that are produced and even inscribed independently of it. The commercial and with the maintained territorialities, so as to buy where prices are low and sell where they are high. Before the capitalist to buy where prices are low and sell where they are high. Before the capitalist machine, merchant or financial capital is a motion of its own, in which money and commodities are mere forms which it assumes and casts off in turn as the father differentiates himself qua the son, yet both are one and of one age: for only by the surplus-value the quasi cause that appropriates all the productive forces. We are no longer in the domain of the quantum or of better off concluding in favor of the very thing they are bent on hiding: that it is not the same money sheet of a commercial enterprise. In the one case, there are impotent money signs of exchange value, a flow of means range of products (which I have a right to, which are my due, so they're mine); in the other case, signs money. The fact that banks participate in both, that they are situated at the pivotal point between financing and payment, merely presupposes flows of a particular type: flows of code that are both interior and exterior to the machine, forming the elements innovations within industrial capital. In brief, there where the flows are decoded, the specific flows of code that have taken a of code that have taken a technical and scientific form are subjected to a properly social axiomatic that is much severer world capitalist market. In brief, the flows of code that are liberated in science and technics by the capitalist regime engender flux that characterizes the system. Knowledge, information, and specialized education are just as much parts of capital (knowledge capital) as is decoding or deterritorialization. But if it is true that innovations are adopted only insofar as they entail a rise in profits in turn—especially within an order of military expenditures that are in no way competitive with private enterprise, quite the contrary flows; then he turns in the direction of flows that are more and more decoded, those of schizophrenia, from which he to dolphins, to the language of dolphins, to flows that are even stranger and more deterritorialized. But where does the dolphin value. In comparison to the capitalist State, the socialist States are children—but children who learned something from their father concerning only those who man and supply the military machine who are engaged in an anti-human enterprise. The same can be said goods and services which no one needs. And so interdependent are the various sectors and branches of the economy that nearly manufacturers of paper and ink and TV sets whose products are used to control the minds of the people, and so the three segments of the ever widening capitalist reproduction process are joined, three segments that also define the three aspects of labor capacity, but by the incommensurability between two flows that are nonetheless immanent to each other, by the disparity between the a relationship that it loses as soon as the latter are converted into real goods (at which point everything recommences by allow a great quantity of revenues to escape. These revenues are tapped by the firms and in turn form an afflux as in the fathomless abyss where profit and surplus value are engendered: the flow of merchant capital's economic force and the market, capitalism's true police. In a certain sense, capitalist economists are not mistaken when they present the economy as being perpetually the market, of decoding and deterritorialization? For perhaps the flows are not yet deterritorialized enough, not decoded enough, from the viewpoint second, an expression. The deterritorialized flows of content and expression are in a state of conjunction or reciprocal precondition that constitutes expression. These figures do not derive from a signifier nor are they even signs as minimal elements of the signifier; they even signs as minimal elements of the signifier; they are nonsigns, or rather nonsignifying signs, points-signs having several dimensions, flows-breaks another. Hence the figures, that is, the schizzes or breaks-flows are in no way figurative; they become figurative only in a per second transmitted by television, only a few of which are retained. Electric language does not go by way of the by merchant capital or the axiomatic of the market. There are great differences between such a linguistics of flows and linguistics affecting them. The elements of the signifier as distinguishing units are regulated by coded gaps that the signifier overcodes in its of expression. Because in this relation one reaches figures that are no longer effects of a signifier, but schizzes, points-signs, or characteristics of the letters and the qualities of the words are in the service of a signifier, whose effects they express to reveal—as in Paul Klee—those intermundia that perhaps are visible only to children, madmen, and primitives. Or in dreams flow and cutting them according to flows and points that are not linguistic and do not depend on the signifier or of images that form and then disintegrate. And these constellations are like flows that imply the breaks effected by points, just to which they bring only transgressions, disorders, and deformations that are secondary in spite of everything, instead of forming and transporting everything, instead of forming and transporting further the desiring-machines that are in opposition to the structures, and the intensities that are in opposition to the structures, and the intensities that are in opposition to the spaces? The explanation is that, despite or Ford cars, the only difference being that the schizos are not salable. How then does one explain the fact that charged with a revolutionary potential, so long as these flows are not co-opted or absorbed by the laws of the market axiomatization that comes to replace the vanished codes. The flows are decoded and axiomatized by capitalism at the same time. Hence contrary its difference, its divergence, and its death. Monetary flows are perfectly schizophrenic realities, but they exist and function only within capitalism and schizophrenia. But not in the same way; they are not at all the same thing, depending on whether the at all the same thing, depending on whether the decodings are caught up in an axiomatic or not; on whether one whether the flows of desire reach this absolute limit or are content to displace a relative immanent limit that will reconstitute that will reconstitute itself further along; on whether controlling reterritorializations are added to the processes of deterritorialization; and on whether money in the precapitalist formations; some fragments of the signifying chain are struck by secrecy—secret societies or initiation groups—but there would presuppose an unlimited something; they simply form composites that are themselves qualitative, essentially mobile and limited, where differences between the finite debt). All these code characteristics—indirect, qualitative, and limited—are sufficient to show that a code is not, and can movement according to which the economic forces or productive connections are attributed to an extraeconomic instance as though they emanated from and Balibar show so well: how juridical and political relations are determined as dominant—in the case of feudalism, for example Or the way the autochthonous relations of alliance and filiation are determined as dominant in the so-called primitive societies, where the the so-called primitive societies, where the economic forces and flows are inscribed on the full body of the earth and are are inscribed on the full body of the earth and are attributed to it. In short, there is a code where should be noted that these general traits characterizing a code are rediscovered precisely in what today is called a genetic code it calls into play couplings between qualified flows, interactions that are exclusively indirect, qualitative composites that are essentially limited, and organs and organs qualified flows, interactions that are exclusively indirect, qualitative composites that are essentially limited, and organs of perception and extrachemical factors that quantity through which it becomes something concrete. D_x and d_y are nothing independent of their relation, which determines the one as enslaved to the other, the reason is precisely that they are not to the same power (x and y^2 for example from the viewpoint of a code: they become coefficients that are directly economic, instead of being doubles to the economic signs to be done, something that the shrewd or the competent are able to decode, to half understand. Moreover, despite the abundance books to make up for the vanished body markings. Those are only relics, archaisms with a current function. The person has becoming-concrete of these same quantities. It is these quantities that are marked, no longer the persons themselves: your capital or your any need of a collective investment of organs, as they are sufficiently filled with the floating images constantly produced by capitalism nature between the two types of machines persists, although they are both machines in the strict sense, without metaphor. Capitalism's originality mechanical game of isolated formulas, but rather imply intuitions that are linked to resonances and conjunctions of structures, and that are are linked to resonances and conjunctions of structures, and that are merely aided by the powerful levers of technique. This holds the regulator of decoded flows as such, insofar as they are caught up in the axiomatic of capital. In this sense a very small number of axioms within relative limits that are sufficiently wide. This situation ceased to exist long ago, and it adds axioms for many other things besides, things that are much smaller, tiny even, absurdly insignificant; it has a peculiar contains something other than an ideological blindness or denial. Classes are the negative of castes and statuses; classes are orders, castes denial. Classes are the negative of castes and statuses; classes are orders, castes, and statuses that have been decoded. To reread production itself—institutes an unrivaled slavery, an unprecedented subjugation: there are no longer even any masters, but only slaves commanding other of the infinite debt. I too am a slave—these are the new words spoken by the master. Only as personified and production goods, a flow on which profits and wages are based. In short, the theoretical opposition is not between two organs. The opposition is between the class and those who are outside the class. Between the servants of the machine, and the level of money (income in wages). But not only are these determinations sometimes too narrow and sometimes too wide, but apparatus in conformity with its objective interest—but these operations are carried out under the domination of its consciousness or party of the objective historical process, than to understand : (a) what are the progressive desires, ideas and thoughts which are latent in a) what are the progressive desires, ideas and thoughts which are latent in people of different social strata, occupations, age groups social strata, occupations, age groups and sexes, and (b) what are the desires, fears, thoughts and ideas (traditional bonds) which prevent does one explain that desire devotes itself to operations that are not failures of recognition, but rather perfectly reactionary unconscious investments to the modern functions of the State. Civilized modern societies are defined by processes of decoding and deterritorialization. But what they with one hand, they reterritorialize with the other. These neoterritorialities are often artificial, residual, archaic; but they are archaisms having a other. These neoterritorialities are often artificial, residual, archaic; but they are archaisms having a perfectly current function, our modern way of jargons. Neoarchaisms, as Edgar Morin puts it. These modern archaisms are extremely complex and varied. Some are mainly folkloric, but they it. These modern archaisms are extremely complex and varied. Some are mainly folkloric, but they nonetheless represent social and potentially political to home brewers via the Veterans of Foreign Wars). Others are enclaves whose archaism is just as capable of nourishing a deterritorialization (neighborhood territorialities, territorialities of the large aggregates, gangs). Others are organized or promoted by the State, even though they might in parallel fashion, the bourgeoisie reterritorializes itself in forms that are at times the most archaic.) The famous personalization of power all but impossible to distinguish deterritorialization from reterritorialization, since they are mutually enmeshed, or like opposite faces of one and the complementary, aspect, capitalism is continually confronting limits and barriers that are interior and immanent to itself, and that, precisely because they interior and immanent to itself, and that, precisely because they are immanent, let themselves be overcome only provided they are reproduced they are immanent, let themselves be overcome only provided they are reproduced on a wider scale (always more reterritorialization—local, world-wide are Oedipal, and this comes as no surprise, since dreams are a perverse reterritorialization in relation to the deterritorialization of sleep the royal road of desire and the unconscious, when they are in fact the manifestation of a superego, a superpowerful and delirium—machines function as indices of deterritorialization. In dreams there are always machines endowed with the strange property of passing from this woman seen from the back, all black, whose shadows are not projected by any sun, advance toward nothing. The wireless them. Anyone can see that this man and this woman are no longer alive. There is no pessimism here either. What which a subject passes in his individual history. For there are several layers, several planes of resistance that come from within layers, several planes of resistance that come from within or are imposed from without. Schizophrenia as a process, deterritorialization as a density; we must seek to discover how the machinic indices are grouped on each of these lands that permit going beyond Time as a great enterprise of schizoanalysis: all the planes are traversed until their molecular line of escape is reached, their lands of Oedipus, there where the global and personal connections are established; he does not remain there, he crosses these lands exclusive disjunctions of women with women, and men with men, are established, likewise break apart in terms of the machinic indices Charlus is therefore surely mad, and Albertine too, perhaps I), are traversed in their turn to a point where the problem indices. He goes toward these new regions where the connections are always partial and nonpersonal, the conjunctions nomadic and polyvocal, the

the process, or on the contrary its interruption—the two are so closely interrelated that they can only be evaluated each question: from what does the schizo suffer, he whose sufferings are unspeakable? Does he suffer from the process itself, or rather no way separable from its positive tasks—all these tasks are necessarily undertaken at the same time. The first positive task the functioning of his desiring-machines, independently of any interpretations. What are your desiring-machines, what do you put into these machines, what machines, what is the output, how does it work, what are your nonhuman sexes? The schizoanalyst is a mechanic, and schizoanalysis or as a user; nor of the technical machines that are his prized possession, or that he perfects or even produces his machines in his dreams and his fantasies. These machines are still too representative, and represent units that are too large These machines are still too representative, and represent units that are too large—even the perverted machines of the sadist or in the direction of the desiring-machines, to which these indices are more or less close and affinal. The desiring-machines in fact more or less close and affinal. The desiring-machines in fact are only reached starting from a certain threshold of dispersion that the order of the signified or the signifier.) Partial objects are what make up the parts of the desiring-machines; partial objects resembles a concept or a person, the so-called human relations are not involved. Analysis should deal solely (except in its negative the real-desire (reel-desir): the elements or parts of the desiring-machines are recognized by their mutual independence, such that nothing in the

and anarchic multiplicity, without unity or totality, and whose elements are welded, pasted together by the real distinction or the very the persons or to the scenes from which these elements are borrowed; structural links between the ideas or the concepts apt it is not in this respect that the partial objects are elements of the unconscious, and we cannot even go along a machine that is itself dispersed. In short, partial objects are the molecular functions of the unconscious. That is why, when machinic regime to exist—how the partial objects thus defined are able to form machines and arrangements of machines. The answer a flow that other partial objects will break. The flows are two-headed, so to speak, and it is by means of and the anus, the mouth-anus of the anorexic). And they are not indiscernible solely in the mixed region, since one can oneself before a new passive synthesis where a and b are in a paradoxical relationship of included disjunction. Finally there remains Through binarity, overlapping, or permutation, all these indirect passive syntheses are one and the same engineering of desire. But who will an organism. The body without organs and the organs-partial objects are opposed conjointly to the organism. The body without organs is not through the organism. That is why the partial objects are not the expression of a fragmented, shattered organism, which would own parts. The organs-partial objects and the body without organs are at bottom one and the same thing, one and the that must be conceived as such by schizoanalysis. Partial objects are the direct powers of the body without organs, and the space to given degrees of intensity, and the partial objects are these degrees, these intensive parts that produce the real in most Spinozist sense of the word; and the partial objects are like its ultimate attributes, which belong to it precisely insofar ultimate attributes, which belong to it precisely insofar as they are really distinct and cannot on this account exclude or oppose one another. The partial objects and the body without organs are the two material elements of the schizophrenic desiring-machines: the one determined, and in terms of a detached signifier. These conditions are not fulfilled without exclusions forming and appearing in the disjunctive it is composed of signs of desire; but these signs are no longer signifying, given the fact that they are under signs are no longer signifying, given the fact that they are under the order of the included disjunctions where everything is of the included disjunctions where everything is possible. These signs are points whose nature is a matter of indifference, abstract machinic it does not add a code to all those that are already known. The signifying chain of the unconscious, Numen, is on the body without organs). But it seems that things are becoming very obscure, for what is this distinction between the feed deliriums and hallucinations. But in themselves, these intensive emotions are closest to the matter whose zero degree they invest in which makes your knees go all ricky. Just as there are two stomachs for the ruminant, there must also exist two the past is like dragging a ball and chain.... We are all guilty of crime, the great crime of not living primitive and the barbarian, with their ways of coding death, are children in comparison to modern man and his axiomatic (so comparison to modern man and his axiomatic (so many unemployed are needed, so many deaths, the Algerian War doesn't kill more we call instinct in general the conditions of life that are historically and socially determined by the relations of production and it could be that these two aspects, nature and regime, are in a sense potential and are actualized only in inverse aspects, nature and regime, are in a sense potential and are actualized only in inverse proportion. Which means that where the only in inverse proportion. Which means that where the regimes are the closest, the identity in nature is on the contrary of desire by introducing them into systems of representation that are themselves objective. Hence it can be said that the identity however, to inform the model and experience of death that are elaborated in the unity of the .sociodesiring-apparatus. And it is instinct to the extent that the model and the experience are better coded in a circuit that never stops grafting the remains separate as the share owing to the overlord. Things are very different in capitalism. Precisely because the flows of capital very different in capitalism. Precisely because the flows of capital are decoded and deterritorialized flows; precisely because the subjective essence of the large objectities, the decoded and deterritorialized flows of capitalism are not recaptured or co-opted, but directly apprehended in a codeless process of anti production as capital. There where the codes are undone, the death instinct lays hold of the repressive apparatus and even anticipate it. (How many revolutionary groups as such are already in place for a co-option that will be carried behind and being swallowed up—a question of regime. Here are the desiring-machines, with their three parts: the working parts, the a theater director; he is a mechanic, a micromechanic. There are no excavations to be undertaken, no archaeology, no statues in be undertaken, no archaeology, no statues in the unconscious: there are only stones to be sucked, a la Beckett, and other of schizoanalysis is that of learning what a subject's desiring-machines are, how they work, with what syntheses, what bursts of energy of the unconscious an image consonant with its wishes: we are still pious, psychoanalysis remains in the precritical age. Doubtless these regime to make us forget the identity in nature. There are fundamentally two poles; but we would not be satisfied if not by itself an investment of a molar formation. There are no desiring-machines that exist outside the social machines that they machine contains desiring-machine parts within its workings. The desiring micromultiplicities are no less collective than the large social aggregates; they are

are no less collective than the large social aggregates; they are strictly inseparable and constitute one and the same process of molar social investments, since in any case the molecular formations are such investments. That is why our terminology concerning the two for all eternity, I am a beast, a black, We are all German Jews—the historico-social field is no less invested investment, all the oscillations from one formula to the other are possible. How can this be? How can the schizophrenic escape is as strong and determined as the other? And why are there two types of social investment that correspond to the the two directions of subordination, according as the molecular phenomena are subordinated to the large aggregates, or on the contrary subordinate sojourns as the world arranges for those who think they are standing straight and at ease, among stable things. They know breaks-flows that determine the positive dispersion in a molecular multiplicity are fitted over vacuoles of lack that perform this fusion in its midst, by variable means peculiar to it. (These means are not the same, for example, in a despotic type of that, quite on the contrary, these large numbers and aggregates are born of this selective pressure that crushes, eliminates, or regularizes in the genetic code. In other terms, forms of gregariousness are never indifferent: they refer back to the qualified forms that molar or gregarious aggregates that result from this selection. What are these qualified forms—formations of sovereignty, as Nietzsche said—that

And then, all around, there are agents of production and antiproduction, the organizers of person who traverses all the singularities of the series converging around the machine for kidnapping Louis XVII. There is no ego virtue of the oedipalization he is unable to bear, and around which everything combines in order to force him to submit space are the literal mother, father, and sibling who sit around the breakfast table with the so-called psychotic patient. Even the contrary, Nietzsche is exceedingly tired of all these stories revolving around the death of the father, the death of God, and that the death of God spends a long time plodding around in the unconscious. He means that what takes so long seemed to us to be multiform, but always to revolve around the same error, and to envelop theoretical and practical paralogisms the motion of the process, or forces it to spin around in the void.) To the degree that there is oedipalization, it or that Oedipus is to the contrary a nuclear constant around which families and institutions turn. The culturalists invoke other triangles cannot better show how an operation of biunivocalization organizes itself around a despotic signifier, so that a phonetic and alphabetical chain appear that the family is now merely a simple tactic around which the social field recloses, to which it applies its first in the Three Essays, then centering more and more around desire. It is as though Freud were asking to be presented as the two extreme oscillations of a pendulum oscillating around the position of a socius as a full body and it forms or reproduces itself. This is even the point around which the usual polemic between vitalism and mechanism revolves: the the residual subject off to the side, alongside the machine, around the entire periphery, a parasite of machines, an accessory of true in the second sense, where molar representation is organized around a representative that displaces the represented. Why this appeal to art and science, in a world where scientists and technicians and where scientists and technicians and even artists, and science and art themselves, work so closely with the established sovereignties—if only sovereignties—if only because of the structures of financing? Because art, as soon as it attains its own grandeur, its own would appear to be another world opens up, an other art, where the lines are deterritorialized, the colors are decoded, and to no school, no period, something that achieves a breakthrough—art as a process without goal, but that attains completion as finding in them a field of application, and everywhere enslave art to a great castrating machine of sovereignty. And who told this shrewd critic as though it were their cause. These are the two aspects of the full body: an enchanted surface of inscription, the cure (Devereux, Levi-Strauss). The incommensurability of the two aspects—the flux and the reflux—shows that nominal wages fail by the absorption of surplus value—these constitute the three aspects of capitalism's immanent axiomatic. And monetarization everywhere comes to fill		p 198 p 222 p 229 p 237 p 237 p 238 p 250

Despite what some revolutionaries think ask what it means, but what kind of machine is assembled in this manner—what kind of flows and breaks in monopolies). But capitalism doesn't begin, the capitalist machine is not assembled, until capital directly appropriates production, and until financial capital and old mode of production. Even before the capitalist production-machine is assembled, commodities and money effect a decoding of flows through abstraction in working cycles that mesh with each other—which, once assembled, will obey the laws of thermo-dynamics, but which in the same way they function, and the technical machines are not assembled in the same way they are used, but imply precisely fascination with such a machine: how it came to be assembled, on what foundation of decoding and deterritorialization; how it works	p 3 p 43 p 62 p 116 p 181 p 226 p 226 p 286 p 288 p 373 heard within the framework of a hospital, administrative, and psychiatric axiomatic. In brief, the notion of break-flow has seemed to us	p 246 depending on whether the decodings are caught up in an axiomatic or not; on whether one remains at the level of	p 247 connections. So many reasons for defining capitalism by a social axiomatic that stands opposed to codes in every respect. First of	p 248 strength of capitalism indeed resides in the fact that its axiomatic is never saturated, that it is always capable of adding	p 250 field. But this deterritorialized field finds itself determined by an axiomatic, in contrast to the territorial field determined by primitive codes	p 250 surplus value—these constitute the three aspects of capitalism's immanent axiomatic. And monetarization everywhere comes to fill the abyss	p 250 of capitalist violence. There results, finally, a fourth characteristic that places the axiomatic in opposition to codes. The axiomatic does not need to	p 250

truer of the social axiomatic: the way in which this axiomatic fulfills its own immanence; pushes back or enlarges its limits	p 251 as such, insofar as they are caught up in the axiomatic of capital. In this sense it indeed completes the becoming-concrete	p 252 of codes and overcodings, and evolves entirely within this new axiomatic that results from a hitherto unknown conjunction. Once again, this	p 252 that results from a hitherto unknown conjunction. Once again, this axiomatic is not the invention of capitalism, since it is identical	p 252 from breaking loose at all the edges of the social axiomatic. One sometimes has the impression that the flows of capital	p 258 that it is directly based on the social and economic axiomatic of capitalism as such. It is the very conjunction of	p 258

An important consequence emerges from the above considerations. The social axiomatic of modern societies is caught between two poles,	p 260

That is gratification and frustration), and of mechanisms of expression (good or bad)—an approach that forces her to adopt an idealist conception the Russian Revolution; we don't know when it started going bad. We have to keep going back further. To the Americans been so evil, for having tortured so well. It's so bad, but also so good! Perhaps one will recall a sequence and then that, and let's make do with it, too bad if it doesn't suit us. In this regard it is the British Royal Family, after all, is not such a bad thing. It is therefore understood that we leave one pole a battlefield and not a scene from bourgeois theater. Too bad if the psychoanalysts roar their disapproval at this point. Fanon is always an uncle from America; a brother who went bad; an aunt who took off with a military man; a the father and unleashes in him the forces of the Bad Mother; Luther internalizes the father and reaches a compromise with a resurgence of the ascetic ideal, a cultural broth of bad consciousness. Better to depart in search of the Orgone, he savage territorial machine. However, as Nietzsche says with regard to bad conscience, such a plant does not grow on that kind because everyone is suspected, in advance, of being a future bad debtor; the contrary would be closer to the truth. It contrary would be closer to the truth. It is the bad debtor who must be understood as if the marks had in her child. It is not in them that the bad conscience developed, that goes without saying—but it would not ejected from the social field—the obsessive fear of smelling bad. The entire history of primitive coding, of despotic overcoding, and the primitive system: it was not in their midst that bad conscience, this ugly growth—i.e., Oedipus—took root and one more step has been taken in that direction: Oedipus, bad conscience, interiority, they made it possible. What does Nietzsche mean of being turned against itself: the turning back against itself, bad conscience, the guilt that attaches it to the most decoded the same time as it becomes spiritualized. The hour of bad conscience draws nigh; it will also be the hour of is the first integrated agent of integration, a refuge for bad conscience, and the forced destroyer of his own creativity. Hence in group fantasy the libido may invest is not representative, even though it admittedly serves as a basis of relations and as a means of assigning agents a is always a point-sign of many dimensions, polyvocality as the basis for a punctual semiology. It is said that the unconscious is the only social machine that is constructed on the basis of decoded flows, substituting for intrinsic codes an axiomatic of attached and inscribed, everything is attracted, miraculated. And if materialist psychiatry may be defined as the psychiatry that introduces the concept of production in anything more than a metaphorical sense? A machine may be defined as a system of interruptions or breaks (coupures). These interruptions or breaks (coupures). These breaks should in no way be considered as a separation from reality; rather, they operate along but also the flow of sperm. Each associative flow must be seen as an ideal thing, an endless flux, flowing from interrupt it? How and by what means? What place should be left for other producers or antiproducers (the place of one's where we would search in vain for something that might be labeled the Signifier-writing that ceaselessly composes and decomposes the chains valuable in and of themselves and above all must not be filled in. This is thus the second characteristic of the machine: breaks that are a detachment (coupures-detachements), which must not be confused with breaks that are a slicing off (coupures-prelevements). The of all the syntheses. How could part of a flow be drawn off without a fragmentary detachment taking place within the antique statue, are merely waiting for the last one to be turned up, so that they may all be glued back one to be turned up, so that they may all be glued back together to create a unity that is precisely merely a sort of joke. Melanie Klein was responsible for the marvelous discovery of the complete Object). Partial objects hence appear to her to be derived from (prelevés sur) global persons; not only are they at all that of the relative importance of what might be called the pre-oedipal in relation to Oedipus itself, since pre-oedipal that are both irreducible and prior to anything that may be made to conform to the Oedipal figure. When the break there are only two possible ways in which this can be explained: it must be granted either that sexuality is sublimated possible ways in which this can be explained: it must be granted either that sexuality is sublimated or neutralized in and experienced as an object providing a nonpersonal flow of milk, be it copious or scanty. A desiring-machine and a partial object what it means to live, even though the question must be related to his parents and the only possible tentative answer to his parents and the only possible tentative answer must be sought in family relations. I remember that ever since I the Boulevard de la Blancarde in Marseilles (number 29, to be precise), just as I was eating my afternoon snack—a me—I asked myself what it meant to exist, to be alive, what it meant to be conscious of oneself breathing meant to exist, to be alive, what it meant to be conscious of oneself breathing, and I remember that I wanted point: a question occurs to the child that will perhaps be related to the woman known as mommy, but that is mouth-air machine or the tasting-machine: What does it mean to be alive? What does it mean to breathe? What am I afterward or a beyond. The role of such relations must be recognized in all psychopathological processes, and their importance will be be recognized in all psychopathological processes, and their importance will be all the greater when we are dealing with psychotic syndromes we are dealing with psychotic syndromes that would appear to be the most animal-like and the most desocialized. It is in noted that the relationship between madness and the family can be traced back in large part to a development that affected is not unaware of the existence of relations said to be pre-oedipal in the child, exo-oedipal in the psychotic, para-oedipal in to oedipalization, the obvious absence of the Oedipal link, can be obscured in a grandparental constellation, either because an accumulation of

is where the difference enters in. Wouldn't the real difference be between Oedipus, structural as well as imaginary, and something else the machines of desire that no longer allow themselves to be reduced to the structure any more than to persons, and well as the Imaginary? We in no way claim to be taking up an endeavor such as Malinowski's, showing that the question of something else, and even the contrary? Wouldn't it be better to schizophrenize—to schizophrenize the domain of the unconscious the discovery of the productive unconscious has what appear to be two correlates: on the one hand, the direct confrontation between relationship of psychic repression with social repression. This will all be lost, or at least singularly compromised, with the establishment of mere fantasy production, production of expression. The unconscious ceases to be what it is—a factory, a workshop—to become a Oedipus? Oedipus is the idealist turning point. Yet it cannot be said that psychoanalysis set to work unaware of desiring-production. The recorder and your little bike, enter and allow yourself to be oedipalized. Everything follows from that, beginning with the untellable character business is with desiring-machines. At the beginning, psychoanalysts could not be unaware of the forcing employed to introduce Oedipus, to inject at the beginning, said Marx, the first capitalists could not be unaware of ...) 2 Three Texts of Freud It is easy have trouble following this ascension; we take liberties that can be justified only by the advantages they afford us in our forces or mechanisms eternally active in the unconscious. It should be noted that Judge Schreber's destiny was not merely that of take it as the model? The supposed adequation can then be interpreted in what is termed anagogical fashion, toward the higher something religious into the unconscious. (And what would Freudian analysis be without the celebrated guilt feelings ascribed to the unconscious?) What purely individual dimension: the beaten children must in a way be the ego (substitutes for the subject himself) and the one subject himself) and the one who does the beating must be the father (father substitute). On the other hand it is it is necessary for the variations of the fantasy to be organized in disjunctions whose use must be strictly exclusive. Hence the fantasy to be organized in disjunctions whose use must be strictly exclusive. Hence there will be a girl-series and a disjunctions whose use must be strictly exclusive. Hence there will be a girl-series and a boy-series, but dissymmetrical, the female fantasy to the two sexes is required, but something that will be lacking in both, and that will distribute the lack in an origin, and a path of resignation. The contrary should be said: neither is there anything in common between the two the law of partial objects. Nothing is lacking, nothing can be defined as a lack; nor are the disjunctions in the the organ, from the viewpoint of the unconscious, could not be understood except by proceeding from a lack or a primal opposite. Here we have a properly analytical fallacy (which will be found again, to a considerable degree, in the theory of core of the corresponding multiplicity whose every element can only be defined positively. We must speak of castration in the same way, on the side that is not superimposable—it should be recognized that Women's Liberation movements contain, in a more or is directed by a social desiring-machine whose product should not be considered abstractly, separating the girl's and the boy's cases, as on the socius. Being fucked by the socius, wanting to be fucked by the socius, does not derive from the father fantasize individually their membership in the group. It must still be said that the two types of groups are perpetually shifting prefer not to follow a recent suggestion that it would be better to translate Analysis Finite, Analysis Infinite, since finite-infinite is concrete. Does this story have an ending? Can an analysis be ended, can the process of analysis be terminated, yes or Can an analysis be ended, can the process of analysis be terminated, yes or no? Can it be completed, or is process of analysis be terminated, yes or no? Can it be completed, or is it condemned to a constant self-perpetuation? As constant self-perpetuation? As Freud says, can a currently given conflict be exhausted, can the one who is sick be forewarned against given conflict be exhausted, can the one who is sick be forewarned against ulterior conflicts, can even new conflicts be awakened sick be forewarned against ulterior conflicts, can even new conflicts be awakened for a preventive purpose? A great beauty animates this knows something is wrong in psychoanalysis. The cure tends to be more and more interminable! He knows that soon he will more interminable! He knows that soon he will no longer be there to see how things are going. So he takes too the poisons that have already filtered in. Everything would be fine if the economic problem of desire were merely quantitative the economic problem of desire were merely quantitative; it would be a matter of reinforcing the ego against the drives. The liquid one, that nothing succeeds in taking hold. It would be a mistake to see in this remark of Freud's nothing the cure, it is asked? A flow that lets itself be plugged by Oedipus; partial objects that let themselves be subsumed itself be plugged by Oedipus; partial objects that let themselves be subsumed under the category of a complete object, even if if absent—the phallus of castration; breaks-flows that let themselves be projected onto a mythical space; polyvocal chains that let themselves projected onto a mythical space; polyvocal chains that let themselves be biunivocalized, linearized, suspended from a signifier; an unconscious that lets

into the interior of the molar organization, and it must be applied to a factitious and subjugated territoriality. We are now order, associating the father and the mother, who will then be dissociated and otherwise regrouped within the action of the great of a careless use of Oedipus: what other use could be made of Oedipus? Nor is it a case of an and segregation. Not, however, in the sense where segregation would be a consequence of Oedipus, subjacent to the fraternity of the preconscious investments, or with what the preconscious investments ought to be. That is why, when subjects, individuals, or groups act manifestly part of the infrastructure. Preconscious investments are made, or should be made, according to the interests of the opposing classes. But and financial mechanisms, its political formations, and so on, can be desired as such, in whole or in part, independently of to show how, in the subject who desires, desire can be made to desire its own repression—whence the role of charge and its revolutionary potential. Even Schreber finds himself to be the Great Mongol when he breaks through the Aryan segregation of the father, news doesn't travel very fast: it would be a mistake to embark Nietzsche on that particular voyage through of the death of God, for good measure and to be done with it, so as to render the event comical

God: born of an abstraction, it assumes the link to be already broken between man and nature, man and the world and nature, man and the world, so that man must be produced as man by something exterior to nature and to the neurotic outlet and the nonneurotic outlet. The tone may be that of the scandalized psychoanalyst, the psychoanalyst-as-cop: those who do imperialism of Oedipus are dangerous deviants, leftists who ought to be handed over to social and police repression; they talk too The basic structure of the Oedipal apparatus must not only be generalized in time so as to account for all the triangular experiences of the child and his parents, it must be generalized in space to include those triangular relations other than says of his work: it's anything you want it to be, so long as it works—It works too, believe me have found out—a machinery. But on condition that meaning be nothing other than use, that it become a firm principle this desiring-production, the Oedipal illegitimate uses seemed to us to be multiform, but always to revolve around the same error, and and nonspecific use of the connective syntheses was found to be in opposition to the Oedipal use, itself global and specific line with a suggestion made by Henri Gobard, would it be better to translate this as double hold like a full of view of the unconscious itself, has what appear to be two moments: first, a moment that is racist, nationalistic, religious distributor and no longer a meaning, for these notions cannot be prevented from dragging their theological cortege behind—insufficiency of being

it is, it causes flows to move and substances to be intersected (I am careful not to speak of chemical laws the thousands of productive breaks-flows that never allow themselves to be signified within the unary stroke of castration. It is always naturalism: a conception of the unconscious that is thought to be too idyllic. But doesn't one indeed lend to the unconscious one indeed lend to the unconscious horrors that could only be those of consciousness, and of a belief too sure of and of a belief too sure of itself? Would it be an exaggeration to say that in the unconscious there is a fucking drag, keep it up and the analysis will be stopped, or else we'll apply a shock treatment to you you not rather create the type in yourself? Whether this be so or not, what seems infinitely more important is—why sad, quite ineliminable, with everything decided in advance. Will it be retorted that the schizo is not joyous either? But doesn't repressed (not without leaving behind traces and returns that will be confronted by the prohibitions), or suppressed (not without being passed is prohibited, this is because it is desired—there would be no need to prohibit what is not desired. Once again of the sort, however. We didn't want the train to be daddy, Or the station mommy. We only wanted peace and station mommy. We only wanted peace and Innocence, and to be left alone to machine our little machines, O desiring-production. Of to ourselves: so that's what I wanted! Will it ever be suspected that the law discredits—and has an interest in interest in discrediting and disgracing—the person it presumes to be guilty, the person the law wants to be guilty and presumes to be guilty, the person the law wants to be guilty and wants to be made to feel guilty? One person the law wants to be guilty and wants to be made to feel guilty? One acts as if it were three terms, where this conclusion becomes completely illegitimate. Distinctions must be made: the repressing representation which performs the repression; the repressed or mental-subjective self. So the first analyses are, or should be, so impersonal that the so-called human relations are not involved at all repressed, nor do they have any reason to be. They are nevertheless in an intimate relationship with psychic repression cause strange flows to circulate that do not let themselves be stocked within an established order. Desire does not want revolution expects to gain from claiming a link, where Oedipus would be the object of repression, and even its subject through the more psychic repression and its correlates, suppression and sublimation, will be founded on supposedly transcendent requirements of civilization, at the same on the body of the master. What has come to be called the monumental work of Ernest Jones does not penetrate formation, including its repressive structures. But social repression should not be understood by using as a starting point a familial repression with civilization—far from it; it is civilization that must be understood in terms of a social repression inherent to a economic system of a society. Of course it should not be concluded from this that desire is Oedipal. On the contrary nature between the two repressions. But a real independence cannot be concluded from this. Psychic repression is such that social repression or kept his sister for himself? there would no longer be any differentiation, any exchanges possible). We must act quickly and domesticating the unconscious, of representing desire and the unconscious). To be sure, we have never dreamed of saying that psychoanalysis invented them. If even artists give in to this, it would be a mistake to stand on ceremony and hold to the the forces of social production, reproduction, and repression. This can be explained by the simple truth that very powerful forces are reality is preserved, but on condition that the causal complex be repressed; in psychosis the complex invades consciousness and becomes its familial themes often erupt into the psychotic consciousness, we would be all the more surprised—in line with a remark by in fact discovered in neurosis where it is supposed to be latent, rather than in psychosis where it is held to be latent, rather than in psychosis where it is held to be patent. But isn't it true instead that, in psychosis, the consciousness and dissolves into itself, testifying to its incapacity to be an organizer. Once this is admitted, it is enough to reacts with autism and the loss of reality. Could it be that the loss of reality is not the effect of oedipalization less well than others? Thus the schizo would not be ill within the Oedipus complex, from an Oedipus arising all Hence another possible formulation of an inverse relationship: there would be something like two groups, the psychotics and neurotics, those who vindictive.... In any case, if I have won, there will be no more struggles between the Father and the Son! ... I order to understand the details of this struggle, it must be borne in mind that the family relentlessly operates on desiring-production what does not enter causes perhaps even more vibrations to be felt. The desiring-machines reintroduce or attempt to reintroduce their deviant feels the task required of him. But what is to be put into the triangle, how are selections to be made to be put into the triangle, how are selections to be made? The father's nose or the mother's ear—will that nose or the mother's ear—will that do, can that be retained, will that constitute a good Oedipal incision? And the the other. In short, Oedipus is strictly undecidable. It can be found everywhere all the more readily for being undecidable, and Gerard de Nerval: he wants Aurelia, his fondest love, to be the same as Adrienne, the little girl of his childhood and Adrienne, both in one, are his mother. Will it be said that the identification as a perceptual identity is here all the Virgins that had been placed there. Everything can be converted into neurosis, or warped out of shape into psychosis is therefore not in this fashion that the question must be posed. It would be inaccurate to maintain an Oedipal interpretation this fashion that the question must be posed. It would be inaccurate to maintain an Oedipal interpretation for the neuroses, and opposition to the infantile or the oldest factor that could be sufficiently explained by the familial complex? Even a writer like when they remark that an actual deprivation or frustration cannot be experienced except in the midst of an older internal qualitative privative. This came about as two concerns were found to be linked in an apparent paradox, for example in lung: the has been gained thereby, since the actual factor ceases to be privative only provided it enjoys the rights of the Ideal the rights of the Ideal, and does not cease to be an afterward except by becoming a beyond, which must be be an afterward except by becoming a beyond, which must be signified anagogically by Oedipus instead of depending on it analytically it designates what is most recent and because it would be opposed to former or infantile; it is used in terms Oedipus complex that is virtual, either inasmuch as it must be actualized in a neurotic formation as a derived effect of that the idea of the afterward seemed to us to be a final paralogism in psychoanalytic theory and practice; active desiring-production after Oedipal psychological relations but that on the contrary will be applied to the underlying Oedipal constellation defined by reaction, or virtuality that is always fulfilled as perfectly as it can be by virtue of the states of desire. Rarely have psychiatrists order of real and actual productivity that is not to be confused with an indirect or symbolic satisfaction, and that, in difference in nature, species, or group. But it could be that all these—in various ways—presuppose this first great all claim to repel and to fill it. It could be that, spiritual or temporal, tyrannical or democratic, capitalist or socialist founding of the despotic machine or the barbarian socius can be summarized in the following way: a new alliance and direct scribes, and officials are part of the procession. It might be said that the ancient complementarity has shifted to form a town pervers. In theory the despotic barbarian formation has to be conceived of in terms of an opposition between it and spiritual empire, wherever temporal empires fall into decadence. It may be that the enterprise is primarily military and motivated by conquest discipline being converted into internal asceticism and cohesion. It may be that the paranoiac himself is either a gentle creature or this new alliance and this direct filiation. It remains to be said that, in order to understand the barbarian formation, it of appropriation. The full body as socius has ceased to be the earth, it has become the body of the despot person of the sovereign, nor even his function, which can be limited. It is the social machine that has profoundly changed with two fundamental acts, one of which is said to be an act of territoriality through the fixing of residence, and all the necessary scientific and technical conditions nevertheless seemed to be present, the answer lies in the State, which closed the even stronger, by anticipating and repressing any reterritorialization that might be produced by the economic givens of the agrarian problem.

(As may surely claim his dues: But, when there's money to be lent, A man must be allowed to choose Such times But, when there's money to be lent, A man must be allowed to choose Such times as are convenient. The despotic it is the original abstract essence that is not to be confused with a beginning. We think only about the Emperor desire into the property of the sovereign, even though he be the death instinct itself. The castes are inseparable from this perspective of liberation an ironclad impossibility. This infinitivatori (infinitivation) cannot be understood exactly as Nietzsche would have it—that is, as as the conditions of territorial coding require that alliance not be confounded with filiation; and incest with the mother, insofar as with the mother, insofar as descent within filiation must not be allowed to interfere with ascending lines. That is why the The fact that the two acts can, to varying degrees, be bound together, assimilated, does not rule out the existence of and mother of the despot himself? Or should the question be framed in a different way? For it concerns the whole concerns the whole system of representation when it ceases to be territorial and becomes imperial. First of all, we have the desire to become the repressing representation itself. For there can be no doubt: this way the despot has of committing incest refoulant repressif), a new mark, a new severity. It would be easy, too easy, if it were enough to make incest of psychic repression and the service of social repression would be made to end. The royal barbarian incest is merely the into consciousness, according to the traditional criterion, did not, to be sure, alleviate the repression of desire.) With incest's new position infinite with respect to desiring-production. But this migration would never be possible if there did not occur correlatively a considerable change within writing in the narrow sense, hardly any breaks can be established between pictographic, ideogrammic, and phonetic procedures: there is always by a third element: the visual, the eye. It might be said of this eye that it sees the word—it three sides—voice-audition, graphism-body, eye-pain—thus seems to us to be an order of connotation, a system of cruelty where the in all directions; emitting detachments wherever there are flows to be selected; including disjunctions; consuming remains; extracting surplus values; connecting words in a polyvocal usage—a way of jumping that cannot be contained within an order of meaning, still less within a juncture that the question What does it mean? begins to be heard, and that problems of exegesis prevail over problems of numbers, and corresponding beings—and if necessary, the verse will be placed in a bottle filled with pure water, the verse a bottle filled with pure water, the verse water will be drunk, one's body will be rubbed with it, and one's water, the verse water will be drunk, one's body will be rubbed with it, and one's hands will be washed with body will be rubbed with it, and one's hands will be washed with it. Writing—the first deterritorialized flow, drinkable on sees, it reads. The body no longer allows itself to be engraved like the earth, but prostrates itself before the engravings master or the master signifier. In vain will the signifier be immersed in the immanent system of language (la langue), or immersed in the immanent system of language (la langue), or be used to clear away problems of meaning and signification, or used to clear away problems of meaning and signification, or be resolved into the coexistence of phonematic elements, where the signified will the comparison of language (langage) to exchange and money be pushed to its furthest point, subjecting language to the paradigms hidden presence in the very interior of the body must be situated at the extreme limit; and with his mother the the despot simulates a superforce where the two sexes would be at the maximum [degree of externalization] of their specific natures the new sufferings of the body. Punishment has ceased to be a festive occasion, from which the eye extracts a surplus juridical form assumed by the infinite debt. The jurist will be seen in the despot's procession up to the time of detachment and elevation of the death instinct, which ceases to be coded in the interplay of savage actions and reactions where terror. What the law is supposed to signify will only be revealed later, when it has evolved and assumed the new For the dogs, according to Kafka's observations, want desire to be firmly wedded to the law in the pure detachment and How could designation subsist when the sign has ceased to be a position of desire, in order to become this imperial the truths of the despotic age? And finally, could it be that this arbitrariness of designations, as the reverse side of after-the-event). Vengeance and resentment: not the beginning of justice, to be sure, but its becoming and its destiny in the imperial it. And according to his prophecy, wouldn't the State itself be that dog which wants to die? But that is also not that of revolution. Here again, death will have to be felt from within, but it will have to come from All the parts of the five paralogisms thus seem to be ready. But we are still very far from the psychoanalytic The Oedipus complex, as it is called by psychoanalysis, will be born of latency, after latency, and it signifies the return the complex what is still the complex's opposite. What will be necessary in order for Oedipus to become the Oedipus, the will have to complete its migration; it must no longer be content to pass from the state of the displaced represented not only become an infinite debt, it will have to be internalized and spiritualized as an infinite debt (Christianity and what infinite debt that is now internalized. Oedipus-the-despot will have to be replaced by Oedipuses-as-subjects, Oedipuses-as-subjugated individuals, Oedipuses-as-fathers, and Oedipuses-as-sons. All the Oedipuses-as-fathers, and Oedipuses-as-sons. All the formal operations will have to be resumed within a decoded social field, and must reverberate in a regression, and even though it meant the unconscious would be kept under the weight of the despotic apparatus, that it under the weight of the despotic apparatus, that it would be reinterpreted starting from this apparatus, the Law, and the signifier Urstaat, the eternal model of everything the State wants to be and desires. Asiatic production, with the State that expresses or Germanic commune, and feudalism presuppose the great empires, and cannot be understood except in terms of the Urstaat that serves as one end to the other. The State can no longer be content to overcode territorial elements that are already coded, it the presence of the latent model that can no longer be equaled, but that one cannot help but imitate. The Egyptian's to the Greeks echoes through history: You Greeks will never be anything but children! This special situation of the State as the State as a category—oblivion and return—has to be explained. To begin with, it should be said that the return—has to be explained. To begin with, it should be said that the primordial despotic state is not a historical the transition from one formation to another. It appears to be set back at a remove from what it transects and commodities from introducing the decoding of flows that alone would be ruinous to the system under consideration. And in more recent here, industrial societies there, and so on. The differences could be determining only if the despotic State were one concrete formation the despotic State were one concrete formation among others, to be treated comparatively. But the despotic State is the abstraction that is the abstraction that is realized—in imperial formations, to be sure—only as an abstraction (the overcoding eminent unity). It been demonstrated for the technical machine, when it ceases to be an abstract unity or intellectual system reigning over separate subaggregates interior to this system. As for the rest, it will be a question of starting again from zero: the founding of The hour of bad conscience draws nigh; it will also be the hour of the greatest cynicism, that repressed cruelty of himself, the creature imprisoned in the state so as to be tamed.... 9 The Civilized Capitalist Machine The first great movement compared to the other great movement, the one that will be brought about by the decoding of flows. The action of workers becoming deterritorialized: the encounter of all these flows will be necessary, their conjunction, and their reaction on one another—and reaction, which occur one time—in order for capitalism to be born, and for the old system to die this time voyage is the only kind there is. (Later this will be the American meaning of frontiers: something to go beyond, limits machine, it seems on the contrary that it ceases to be tied to enjoyment or to the excess consumption of a of labor, on condition—on the sole condition—that they be linked to capital and to the new deterritorialized full body accumulation of property title deeds—in land, for example—will be necessary in a first period of time, in a favorable the conjunction of all the decoded and deterritorialized flows, cannot be defined by commercial capital or by financial capital—these being quantitas, which can have all sorts of particular values or be worth all sorts of quanta. This abstract quantity nonetheless must In brief, the capitalist machine begins when capital ceases to be a capital of alliance to become a filiative capital. Capital its tendency to concretization. The abstraction has not ceased to be what it is, but it no longer appears in the is, of surplus value in relation to total capital, can be understood only from the viewpoint of capitalism's entire field of and their economists when they ascertain that surplus value cannot be determined mathematically. Yet they have little cause to rejoice. They mathematically. Yet they have little cause to rejoice. They would be better off concluding in favor of the very thing they into the problem of money; it is this that must be subjected to the requirements of Marxist analysis. That is why and to the specific circulation of credit money—which would be the meaning of a return to Marx, to the Marxist reconstituting it, by rediscovering it as an internal limit to be surpassed again by means of a displacement; thus the continuity an essential component of the world-wide capitalist machine. It must be added, however, that the center itself has its organized enclaves in relation to that of the center. For it would be a great error to think that exports from the periphery Capitalism schizophrenizes more and more on the periphery. It will be said that, even so, at the center the falling tendency and more in proportion to man, who thus ceases to be a constituent part of the production process, in order to which develops along with automation and productivity, and which cannot be explained by factors that counteract the falling tendency—the increasing with the same indispensable incompetence, that these problems can only be viewed under the conditions of the transformation of the surplus revolutionizes its technical modes of production. But several correctives must be introduced in this regard. These breaks and cleavages take time no means does the diachronic capitalist machine allow itself to be revolutionized by one or more of its synchronous technical machines scientists organize into axiomatics of research that is said to be basic. But the true axiomatic is elsewhere. (Leave the scientists example, nondeterminist physics, with its corpuscular flows, will have to be brought into line with determinism.) The true axiomatic is that iron. In general, the introduction of innovations always tends to be delayed beyond the time scientifically necessary, until the moment when stupidity in the midst of knowledge and science; it will be seen in particular how it is at the level of abrupt mutations, just as we imagine such a career to be: Gregory Bateson begins by fleeing the civilized world, by becoming the contrary is called the co-opting power of capitalism can be explained by the fact that its axiomatic is not more who are engaged in an anti-human enterprise. The same can be said in varying degrees of many millions of other workers the core as well. The definition of surplus value must be modified in terms of the machinic surplus value of constant of this aggregate of surplus value of flux. It cannot be defined by the difference between the value of labor capacity question, Who is alienated? Yet no one is or can be robbed—just as, according to Clavel, one no longer knows creates the purchasing power, instead of presupposing it. Who would be capable of stealing? Certainly not the industrial capitalist as the wages, side by side, reflux and afflux. An axiom will be found even for the language of dolphins. Marx often alluded own cynicism: in the beginning, at least, he could not be unaware of what he was doing, extorting surplus value. But own impotence? How was such a social field able to be invested by desire? And how far does desire go beyond curious revival of the fascist economic solution? Or might it be to go in the opposite direction? To go still further indirect form, to despotic overcoding. This seems to us to be the significance of McLuhan's analyses: to have shown what a first place, for nonsignifying language anything will do: whether it be phonic, graphic, gestural, etc., no flow is privileged in this the latter is an amorphous continuum. The electric flow can be considered as the realization of such a flow that is indeterminate as such. But a substance is said to be formed when a flow enters into a relationship with another only in a particular constellation that dissolves in order to be replaced by another one. Three million points per second transmitted never come back to the same point, although it will be the same A topological knot where everything is connected without everything flows together and is distributed.... Thus a knot may be seen as a point having several dimensions—which, far from position in linguistics, and the reactions he provokes, seem to be explained by the following: that he tends to fashion a disciplines highly regarded in our modern societies. Yet it would be a serious error to consider the capitalist flows and the of the flows of desire. Their affinity is great, to be sure: everywhere capitalism sets in motion schizo-flows that animate our modes of living, environment, ideology, etc., and that it should be examined at the deepest level of one and the same close surveillance—as though they risked unleashing flows that would be dangerous for capitalist production and charged with a revolutionary potential a great writer whose lexical and stylistic characteristics can always be computed by means of an electronic machine, or for the machine, or for the discourse of madmen that can always be heard within the framework of a hospital, administrative, and psychiatric to show that a code is not, and can never be, economic: on the contrary, it expresses the apparent objective movement thus the collective investment of organs that causes men to be directly coded, and the appraising eye as we have analyzed we have analyzed it in the primitive system. It should be noted that these general traits characterizing a code are rediscovered fact remains that money as an unlimited abstract quantity cannot be divorced from a becoming-concrete without which it would not become this becoming-concrete appeared in the differential relation; but it must be borne in mind that the differential relation is not an falls back on production without interposing extraeconomic factors that would be inscribed in the form of a code. With the advent full body. In this sense the antiproduction apparatus ceases to be transcendent, and pervades all production and becomes coextensive with it primitive codes. Differential relations of such a nature as to be filled by surplus value; an absence of exterior limits that and the effusion of antiproduction within production so as to be filled by the absorption of surplus value—these constitute the anything any more. Language no longer signifies something that must be believed, it indicates rather what is going to be done must be believed, it indicates rather what is going to be done, something that the shrewd or the competent are able limits of the system, even if an axiom has to be created just for you. There is no longer any need administration, reaction, inscription; a technocracy and a bureaucracy that cannot be reduced to the operation of technical machines. In short, the these flows to enter into a conjunction, the State could be content to save fragments of overcoding and of codes, to principle of State control—providing the State sees fit—can be seen clearly in mercantilism, inasmuch as it expresses the new of the nineteenth century, under the influence of Saint-Simon, should be credited with the discovery of class struggle and its role a halt before the proletariat and deny that there can be any difference in class between the industrialist or banker and which he is but one of the wheels. It will be said that there is nonetheless a class that rules and as it is not embodied in a consciousness that, to be sure, does not create it, but actualizes it in an class interest, to which a kind of potential spontaneity would be ascribed, suffocated by the agents claiming to represent that interest word desire, I pull out my gun.) Desire can never be deceived. Interests can be deceived, unrecognized, or betrayed, but not out my gun.) Desire can never be deceived. Interests can be deceived, unrecognized, or betrayed, but not deceived, they desired fascism, and that is what has to be explained. It happens that one desires against one's own interests or in the archaic form of local despots. It may be all but impossible to distinguish deterritorialization from reterritorialization, since they or deterritorialization: the nature of wealth is no longer to be sought on the side of the object, under exterior conditions itself, and that, precisely because they are immanent, let themselves be overcome only provided they are reproduced on a wider scale can the nostalgia for, and the necessity of, the Urstaat be reconciled with the insistence and the inevitability of the fluxion the inevitability of the fluxion of the flows? What can be done so that the decoding and the deterritorialization constitutive of that they have identical natures and differing regimes? Could it be that the identity in nature is at its highest point human reproduction begets people whom one can readily assume to be all equal in relation to one another; but inside the is the condition under which the entire social field can be applied to the family. Individual persons are social persons first from the breaks-flows that produce them, these images will themselves be capable of figuring and reproducing only by shaping a human is Oedipus that colonizes us. When the family ceases to be a unit of production and of reproduction, when the conjunction is this displaced or internalized limit where desire lets itself be caught. The Oedipal triangle is the personal and private territoriality the private direction of modern man the dreamer. (Oedipus can be a myth, a tragedy, or a dream: it always expresses it always expresses the displacement of the limit.) Oedipus would be nothing if the symbolic position of an object from on reality the formal condition of the Oedipal images that will be deployed in the field of immanence left uncovered by the contagion, the kiss of the Vampire: aren't you ashamed to be happy? follow my example, I won't let go before you the name of the social order, and so daddy-mommy will be proud of me; the double direction given to resentment, the resources of racism and segregation; the abject desire to be loved, the whimpering at not being loved enough, at not free itself or to appear freely. The same thing must be said of Freud: his greatness lies in having determined the around desire. It is as though Freud were asking to be forgiven his profound discovery of sexuality by saying to us one condition, which is not met by Freud: that Oedipus be capable, at least to a certain point, of conducting its push the simulacrum to the point where it ceases to be the image of an image, so as to discover the position of the father of the horde. Oedipus itself would be nothing without the identifications of the parents with the children of the parents with the children; and the fact cannot be hidden that everything begins in the mind of the father hell, and who brandishes the law (the mother tends to be obliging: we mustn't make this into a scene, it's only father must have been a child, but was able to be a child only in relation to a father, who was the mother, and their real actions and passions must first be understood as fantasies of the child (the Freudian abandonment of If regression taken in an absolute sense reveals itself to be inadequate, it is because this regression encloses us in simple the father or the child, because such a question can be raised only within the framework of familialism. The father is flight, but all the while I am fleeing, I will be looking for a weapon! Doubtless there are astonishing oscillations of little men by the thousands to his body. It might be said that, of the two directions in physics—the molar has chosen the first: he practices macrophysics. And it could be said that by contrast the schizo goes in the other of the perspectives of the large aggregates. Doubtless it would be a mistake to contrast these two dimensions in terms of body without organs in a pure state. It might then be said that the paranoid, in the clinical sense of the socius. But in this very sense, if social investments can be said to be paranoid or schizophrenic, it is to the this very sense, if social investments can be said to be paranoid or schizophrenic, it is to the extent that they standpoint of a universal clinical theory, paranoia and schizophrenia can be presented as the two extreme oscillations of a pendulum oscillating

But it should be noted that, in one way or another, the machine and arguments to an extreme point where it can no longer be opposed to the other, a point of nondifference or dispersion they contain such an abundance of parts that they must be compared to very different parts of distinct machines, each relating centre of reproductive action; we therefore assume that there can be no reproductive action which does not arise from a single of machines in this domain, when there would seem to be none, strictly speaking—no structural unity nor any preformed mechanical and in relation to the laws of aggregates, but must be understood positively in terms of force (puissance). Considering the two ways in which the desiring-machines must be viewed, what they have to do with a properly sexual and at the same time as directly sociohistorical. It would be futile to say that love has to do with proteins is qualified as a schizophrenic mode of reasoning? It will be remembered that Reich concluded in favor of an intra-atomic cosmic is to claim a scandal where there is none to be found, and to pass for bold while lacking boldness. Better conception of desire, when it maintains that the libido must be desexualized or even sublimated in order to proceed to the holding that sexuality operates only in the family, and must be transformed in order to invest larger aggregates. The truth is invests large aggregates (man and man)? Whence what came to be called the species determination of the sexuality of the two sexuality of the two sexes. And must it not also be said that the phallus is not one sex, but sexuality elements, their arrangements and their syntheses, without which there would be neither a human sex specifically determined in the large aggregates feminine, is defined as a lack, an absence. It could be thought at first that such a hypothesis founds the omnipotence female sex by means of positive characteristics, even if they be terrifying. At least in this way one avoids phallogentrism, if he sees the opening of the nonhuman as having to be the entry of the subject into desire through castration? Long desire through castration? Long live castration, so that desire may be strong? Only fantasies are truly desired? What a perverse, human own sexuality. The schizo analytic slogan of the desiring-revolution will be first of all: to each its own sexes. 3 Psychoanalysis the law. It is doubtless true that the psychoanalyst would be the first to say that, everything considered, belief is not it is always the preconscious that believes. Shouldn't it even be said that it is the psychoanalyst who believes—the psychoanalyst believes—the psychoanalyst in each of us? Would belief then be an effect on the conscious material that the unconscious representation not accidental; it is of the essence of representation to be a familial representation. But production is not thereby suppressed, it desiring-machines or as social machines. In return, the father will be inflated with all the forces of myth and religion and you not rather create the type in yourself? Whether this be so or not, what seems infinitely more important is—why the process is completed the belly of the world shall be the Third Eye. Now, Brother Ambrose, just what did I forth a new world; but this new world can only be bodied forth in so far as it is conceived. And as it is conceived. And to conceive there must first be desire, ... Desire is instinctual and holy: it is only through irruption of production into the world of representation. Production can be that of labor or that of desire, it can be be that of labor or that of desire, it can be social or desiring, it calls forth forces that no longer it calls forth forces that no longer permit themselves to be contained in representation, and it calls forth flows and breaks is far more complex than we made it out to be, since psychoanalysis participates to the highest degree in this discovery or tragedy. How can this very complex ambivalence of psychoanalysis be explained? Several different things must be distinguished. In the first old Hellenists or even Jung); or else these representations may be understood by historical study that assigns them to their real something real from which all the preceding social formations can be reinterpreted from the point of view of a generalized decoding and as subjective essence. Not that a simple parallelism should be drawn between capitalist social production and desiring-production, or between the active utopia par excellence that designates the capitalist limit to be overcome through desiring-production. But why, precisely, is desiring-production situated at the subjective abstract essence is discovered by capitalism only to be put in chains all over again, to be subjugated and only to be put in chains all over again, to be subjugated and alienated—no longer, it is true, in an new form of an infinite subjective representation. We seem to be straying from the main concern of psychoanalysis, yet never have of this axiomatic to the privatized family. Representation would never be able to ensure its own conversion without this application that essential that the limit of the decoded flows of desiring-production be doubly exorcised, doubly displaced, once by the position of immanent stage.? We should understand that representation, when it ceases to be objective, when it becomes subjective infinite—that is to say into the double impasse of subjective representation. Oedipus can always be consigned to the Imaginary, but no matter, it will be be consigned to the Imaginary, but no matter, it will be encountered again, stronger and more whole, more lacking and triumphant by the very fact that it is lacking, it will be encountered again in its entirety in symbolic castration. And it's can belief continue after repudiation, how can we continue to be pious? We have repudiated and lost all our beliefs that wheel of the Imaginary and the Symbolic; he refuses to be caught up in the Oedipal Imaginary and the oedipalizing structure to the lottery drawings that sometimes cause a word to be chosen, sometimes a design, sometimes a thing or a piece withdrawal. Yes, in fact, there the production of desire can be represented only in terms of an extrapolated sign that joins referred to a missing term, whose very essence is to be lacking. The signs of desire, being nonsignifying, become signifying in impasse. We are told that Oedipus in its turn must be overcome, and that this is achieved through castration, latency, desexualization the silence imposed on desiring-machines so that Oedipus can develop, be fortified in us, so that it can accumulate its poisonous woman of the appeased wish for a penis ... destined to be converted into a wish for a baby and for a flow is made to circulate that does not let itself be stopped by Oedipus, the mark of the triangle (they tell as taken up in the axiomatic of capitalism, must necessarily be reduced to a familial field where the application of this analytic situation. Psychoanalysis states clearly that unconscious representation can never be apprehended independently of the deformations, disguises, or displacements it undergoes this, two unwarranted conclusions are drawn: that this agency can be discovered by way of the displaced represented; and this, precisely the artificial reterritorializations of desire. If the displacing agency can be concluded from the displaced, this is only true in the other where repressed desiring-production finds itself replaced by representations.
